Brief mention of the agency:

The involvement of the researchers traces back to the spring of 2016. Darpa, the Pentagon's research funding agency, wanted to commission data scientists to develop the use of so-called DNS logs, records of when servers have prepared to communicate with other servers over the internet, as a tool for hacking investigations.

Darpa identified Georgia Tech as a potential recipient of funding and encouraged researchers there to develop examples. Mr. Antonakakis and Mr. Dagon reached out to Mr. Joffe to gain access to Neustar's repository of DNS logs, people familiar with the matter said, and began sifting them.

Hey (b)(6)

Allow me to re-introduce to (b)(6) who is the new (b)(6) I think it would be a great idea for the two of you to get on a call and catch up about the status of things.

Thanks,
