gave Army commanders sufficient confidence that they allowed lead elements like the 3/7 Cavalry to operate well ahead of other friendly forces. Without such air dominance, these forces would have risked being cut off and destroyed by counterattacking Iraqi forces. Although the Iraqis were able to move several brigades a few hundred miles into new defensive positions without being detected and attacked by air, in no case were they able to conduct operationally significant counteroffensives. Finally, Navy, Marine, and USAF aircraft became the first choice for close support for most ground forces, especially in built up areas where the risk of collateral damage limited the use of artillery.

The new strategy will look to air-ground forces to protect emerging democracies from external threats and, in the extreme, take down regimes that are a threat to their neighbors or threaten the international order more broadly. During the Cold War, the United States was able to focus its planning and posture for large scale combat on two primary areas and to forward deploy substantial combat power accordingly. Today the threat is less focused and U.S. air and ground forces could be called to project power in many regions of the globe. This has led both the Army and the Air Force to emphasize expeditionary capabilities.

As the Army moves toward lighter and more agile forces, it increasingly views air power as indispensable, both for ISR and for oncall fires. Airmen are generally enthusiastic about these new opportunities to partner with the Army but have some reservations about the high costs of providing on-call airpower 24 hours a day, for weeks or months on end over a large battlespace. If this were to become the dominant preoccupation of U.S. air forces, it might require a very large force structure and render airpower a passive instrument waiting to be called into action. Airmen argue that on-call fires should be limited in time and space-for example, provided during a major offensive but not during routine operations. Air operations instead would be used primarily to create opportunities for ground force maneuver, to protect exposed flanks, and to interdict enemy forces far beyond friendly forces. At the same time, ground maneuver should be used to make enemy forces more vulnerable to detection and attack from the air. In a true partnership, air and ground forces would be viewed as mutually enabling, shifting back and forth between supported and supporting roles.

Major combat operations like these will remain important, but, as we observed in Chapter Two, potential enemies recognize the risks and costs associated with fighting the United States and its allies head-on and are adapting their strategies and capabilities accordingly. Hence, such large-scale combat may be the exception rather than the rule. More commonly, the military role in exporting freedom will be less direct. Often, forward deployed forces will be central to assuring regional stability within which regimes can liberalize successfully, and this function must be factored in forward basing decisions. In many cases, the primary security problem facing emerging democracies will be internal. In those cases, the greatest contribution that U.S. forces can make is in training, equipping, and advising host nation forces. In some circumstances, U.S. forces may go beyond security assistance and provide operational support to local forces in the form of lift, ISR, or fire support.

Defeating an insurgency requires the local government to convince the populace that it can provide security and govern in an effective manner. Although foreign troops (e.g., U.S.) may improve the security situation in the short run, dependence on them undermines the credibility of the local government. Nationalist sentiments can be easily manipulated against the "occupiers," fueling an insurgency that otherwise could have been defeated with local forces alone.⁹⁹ Thus, U.S. forces need to keep a low profile in counter-insurgency operations.

One interesting option worth pursuing is the partnering of U.S. air assets (which can often keep a low profile) with local ground forces. Local ground forces have many potential advantages: they know the local environment, customs, and language, and can (at least in theory) gather intelligence more easily from the civilian population; they are acclimatized to the weather and terrain; and their casualties aren't carried daily in U.S. papers. If professionally led, their presence enhances rather than undermines confidence in the national government. With the right training and equipment, which may often come from U.S. ground forces, they can be highly effective. U.S. air forces can provide powerful force multipliers such as enduring airborne surveillance of key areas, and surge lift capacity for major operations and precision strike. Over time, the United States will want to help friendly nations develop an indigenous ability to conduct these missions, but in the short run U.S. air forces will need to provide these capabilities.

INTEGRATING AIR, SPACE, AND MARITIME POWER

The new grand strategy offers three broad roles for air, space, and maritime forces, within each of which lie a number of challenging responsibilities: protecting the commons, projecting power against state adversaries, and defeating terrorist groups abroad.

Protecting the Commons

Freedom of innocent navigation through the air, on the high seas, and in near-earth space is a critical component of any peaceful and prosperous global order. While the dictates of international law and the actions of supranational bodies can be counted upon to govern the actions of respectable parties, the ability to enforce these norms is needed as both a deterrent to misbehavior and, on occasion, to punish noncompliance. As the dominant military power in all three media, the United States should expect to be a major contributor to efforts in these directions and, as the services charged with maintaining the nation's main capabilities in the air, at sea, and in outer space, the Air Force and Navy will carry the main responsibility for the nation.

There may be nothing particularly new in this assignment. What may be changing, however, is the nature and extent of possible challenges to the generally peaceful global regime. While non-belligerent air and maritime traffic has often been at risk in the context of conflicts among nations—the Iran—Iraq war being one recent example—the threat from subnational terrorist and guerrilla organizations appears to be increasing, as witnessed by the surface-to-air missile engagements of an Israeli airliner in Kenya in 2002 and a DHL cargo jet in Baghdad the next year, and Al Qaeda's attack on a French oil tanker off Yemen in 2002. And, the historical sanctuary of space may also be eroding as technologies enabling destruction, disablement, or interference with satellite functions become more widely available to states and subnational groups. The image of 21"-century "Barbary pirates" exploiting modern technology to interfere with peaceful and necessary uses of air, sea, and space may be a little exaggerated but nonetheless looms as a possibility.¹⁰⁰

Dealing with possible threats to this global commons requires, above all, enhanced situational awareness and responsiveness in all three media, especially in space and at sea. The Air Force is currently pursuing several initiatives, including the Rapid Attack Identification Detection and Reporting System and the Space-Based Space Surveillance System, intended to improve its ability to sense and assess attacks on space assets. Whether these specific programs are the right or complete solutions, their purpose is an important one. The Air Force should also continue efforts to develop capabilities to rapidly deploy affordable replacement or supplementary satellites so that crucial space-based functions are not lost or impaired. Both military and civilian space planners have worked to achieve this long-sought capability for a number of years, but the cost per pound of payload orbited and the overall pace of launch preparation and on-orbit checkout do not seem to have improved dramatically. New energy (and resources) may need to be injected and, as businesses and individuals around the world become more dependent on widely-available space-based "utilities" like communications and navigation, military efforts may need to expand to encompass protecting and augmenting civilian and international space capabilities.

An alternative approach to providing ensuring the availability of critical capabilities could be to place the appropriate payloads on platforms that operate within the atmosphere rather than on satellites.

High altitude, long-endurance aircraft-presumably unmanned-can act as sensor platforms, communication relays, and even GPS transmitters. Lighter-than-air vehicles operating above 65,000 feet, a domain often referred to as "near-space," might perform the same functions. Pending breakthroughs in space launch capabilities, it may prove far less expensive to provide hedges against the loss of key satellites in this way.

At sea, the Navy's challenge is primarily to increase its wide-area surveillance capabilities. A naval task group's field of view is fairly large, but the oceans are far larger. Combating piracy and other threats to freedom of navigation arising outside of classic state-to-state warfare is likely to demand a surveillance "footprint" that is larger than that which can be maintained by traditional naval assets, can penetrate areas inhospitable to these assets, and is both more persistent and more distributed geographically than these forces can sustain. Land-based aircraft such as the venerable P-3 remain valuable for these missions; the Navy should also be encouraged to continue its efforts to develop and field the Broad Area Maritime Surveillance (BAMS) UAV, a version of the Air Force's Global Hawk that has both a longer onstation time than any manned aircraft and is less reliant on relatively nearby land basing.

Projecting Power

We argued above that the Army has a predominant role to play in crucial and difficult counter-terrorism, advisory, and nation assistance operations. We argue below that the Marine Corps is uniquely suited to a new and deeply synergistic relationship with the joint special operations community. While air and naval forces will make important contributions in these areas, the core future challenge they confront is projecting U.S. power against state adversaries. As we discussed in Chapter Two, these campaigns are markedly less likely than in the past to be centered on large armies committing aggression across land borders. Instead, the threats of primary concern will arise from smallto-medium-sized arsenals of nuclear weapons (and other so-called "weapons of mass destruction"), larger numbers of conventionally-armed ballistic and cruise missiles, and other modern "anti-access" capabilities. Defeating enemies thus armed seems to call for the kinds of responsive and flexible surveillance and fire capabilities that are fielded by U.S. air and maritime forces, and the requirements of such conflicts should to a large extent guide both Air Force and Navy modernization programs.

DRAFT: NOT CLEARED FOR OPEN PUBLICATION

Both as delivery systems for nuclear weapons and as "conventional" threats to U.S. and allied bases and other infrastructure targets, ballistic and cruise missiles demand a robust and effective set of counters. The Navy is set to field a wide-area defense system against theater ballistic missiles (TBMs), based on the Aegis radar and an upgraded variant of Standard Missile. It will be capable of intercepting TBMs outside the atmosphere.¹⁰¹ This capability will be in great demand to defend targets ashore. While a potentially significant contribution to success in future wars, however, demand for missiledefense capabilities may constrain the United States' ability to employ its surface naval power in other, more traditional, sea control and power projection tasks. Concerns over losing operational flexibility may in part explain why the Navy plans in the near term to procure only a small number of interceptor missiles. Both the potential of the system and the yawning gap between needed and fielded defensive capabilities suggest that it should expand and accelerate production and fielding, assuming that it continues to do well in testing.

The Air Force's future in missile defense lies in two principle areas, at least if assessed in terms of its published modernization plans. It intends to maintain its traditional role of providing missile warning and attack assessment with the much-delayed and overrun-plagued Space-Based Infra-Red System (SBIRS) satellites. Its only other significant investment in theater missile defense (TMD) is the AL-1A airborne laser (ASL) aircraft. The ABL is unique in being the only boost-phase intercept system currently in advanced development. It has suffered several technical problems and, in any case, may never be procured in large numbers. Even if it is fielded, its capabilities may prove to be limited against the most important and dangerous threats, which likely will be beyond its effective range. If defending against ballistic missiles is the game, the Air Force will need to pursue concepts and capabilities beyond SBIRS and ABL if it wants make an important contribution.

Countering TBMs and cruise missiles has, of course, an offensive component as well. And neutralizing an adversary's nuclear and antiaccess arsenals will likewise involve going after an array of difficult targets on an enemy's territory. These include small mobile targets, such as missile TELS, and hardened, deeply buried targets, such as nuclear weapons storage sites. Currently deployed forces do not have impressive capabilities against either type of target. Depending on the terrain and the enemy's concept of operations, just discovering either a mobile TEL or the precise location of an underground facility can be exceedingly difficult.

While this is not just an Air Force problem, the Air Force will obviously play a major role in any intelligence architecture that manages to make significant inroads on the mobile and hidden targets problem. Space Radar and the E-10 aircraft are potentially important contributors, but both face development and acquisition challenges and ' would not represent a total solution in any event. Promising approaches that merit further examination include fielding a high endurance, stealthy UAV that can loiter in enemy airspace; new-generation sensors, such as hyper spectral imaging systems, that can penetrate many types of camouflage and cover; and developing new munitions, including high-speed standoff weapons that can substantially shorten the time between detecting a mobile target and successfully engaging it.

Hardened and deeply buried targets likewise present serious challenges. Ultimately, the diggers of tunnels will always be able to go deeper than weapons we might devise to get at them, so at some level we are destined to lose this contest. But DoD must keep working on concepts to bottle up, if not to destroy, assets that enemies might try to bury. As with mobile targets, gaining good information about the location, construction, and layout of such facilities is the sine qua non of effectively attacking them. This requirement creates tremendous demands for day-to-day surveillance of activities in countries with which our forces might go to war. Specialized weapons to close portals, destroy support systems (such as ventilation ducts), and to deny personnel access to buried facilities are also called for.

Another response to growing threats from ballistic and cruise missiles is to procure and field air forces that are less dependent on access to bases within range of the most numerous of these systems. The Air Force's current and programmed combat aircraft rely heavily on mostly single-seat fighters with a relatively short, unrefueled range for sustained combat operations. While these aircraft have proven themselves capable of undertaking missions over long ranges, they require extensive support from air-to-air refueling tankers (which themselves must be based somewhere in the vicinity). These aircraft also have a limited payload carrying capability, which, coupled with low sortie rates due to long mission durations, translates into fewer kills per sortie.

The desirability of longer-range systems is likely to increase because of three factors. First, the threat to land bases from nuclear weapons, conventional missiles, and unconventional forces, such as special operations forces and terrorists, is increasing. Second--in part but only in part--because of this, the issues associated with political access are unlikely to get easier. Air Force operations since 1973 and through Operation Iraq Freedom have frequently been impeded by the inability to gain needed basing and overflight rights from even close allies, and-as exemplified in recent comments by President Roh of South Korea-these challenges remain.¹⁰² Third, in some important scenarios-a China-Taiwan showdown being the clearest example-there is simply a dearth of attractive options for basing short combat aircraft. A more robust mix of longer and shorter-range platforms, which could include combat UAVs, would offer joint commanders important flexibility in solving their most pressing operational and tactical problems.¹⁰³

An advantage of navies for power projection is their relative independence from land bases, except for resupply. Modern surface ships and submarines can operate for weeks at a time, ranging over thousands of miles, without resupply from port, a quality prized in theaters where access to land bases may be questionable due to uncertainty about the coalition politics or growing threats to fixed facilities. Offsetting these strengths to some extent are limitations the Navy faces in mounting sustained, large-scale offensive operations ashore, especially over longer distances. Even a Nimitz-class aircraft carrier can launch and recover only around 100 to 150 sorties per day on a sustained basisthe equivalent of about 30 B-52 sorties-and at all but the shortest ranges, their fighters must rely on land-based tankers for support. Carrier-based aircraft also face limits on their payload and, until the fielding of the F-35, all lack stealth, which is crucial to maintaining reasonable survivability against modern air defense weapons, such as the Russian-built SA-10 and SA-20.104

In the end, the United States will be able to succeed in the very demanding power projection tasks of the future only if the land- and sea-based components operate together, capitalizing on each other's respective strengths and compensating for areas of relative weakness. This means that in situations where basing for land-based fighters is in short supply, sea-based forces should be prepared to take the lead in carrying the fight ashore, with the important assistance of Air Force tankers, bombers, and surveillance assets based more remotely. Similarly, in situations where fixed-wing naval aircraft are of limited use-perhaps because the air defense environment is at least initially too severe or the distances to the targets are too great-the joint commander can still exploit sea-based TMD to protect air bases ashore and land-attack missile forces to enable and amplify Air Force use of its stealthier, more survivable fleet to greatest effect. Efforts should be made to formalize, facilitate, and expand cooperation between the Navy and the Air Force so that effective joint operations can be mounted even in situations where significant portions of each service's force "package" is, for one reason or another, not available.

Defeating Terrorist and Insurgent Groups Abroad

While the main focus of the Air Force and Navy should be on dealing with the dangerous challenges presented by state adversaries, both services also have important roles to play in neutralizing terrorist and insurgent groups threatening the United States or its friends and allies. Both services will be called upon to provide surveillance assets; one initiative worth pursuing might be the development of a UAV that is smaller and less costly than the Predator class, but substantially more capable in terms of range, endurance, and payload than the "tactical" UAVs being fielded by the Army and Marines. Properly trained personnel, with appropriate area experience and language skills, will be needed to make sense of the intelligence "take" as well as to interact with host countries as trainers and advisors.

For the Air Force, training, and advising friendly governments will require frequent, small, prolonged, and widespread deployments, creating demands for new force protection concepts, forces, and equipment. Assets needed for direct support of both U.S. and non-U.S. forces engaged in combat operations will include surveillance, mobility, combat searchand-rescue and medical evacuation, and from time to time, fire support. For the latter role, some variety of "gunship-like" platform could prove very valuable.¹⁰⁵

The Navy's SEALs, like all other elements of America's special operations forces, are already deeply engaged in the "war on terror."

¹⁰⁵ By "gunship-like" we mean a weapons system that combines fairly long range, a reasonable degree of survivability against low- to medium threats, a deep and flexible magazine of ordnance, long endurance, and adequate communications and sensor capability to fight safely and effectively in conjunction with hotly-engaged friendly ground forces.

Like the other Services, the Navy should be directed to develop cadres of sailors who, while not trained to the same level and range of skills as special forces, have the language and cultural background and the technical skills needed to be highly effective as trainers and advisors to friendly governments and militaries. Naval warships and surveillance aircraft will also be employed in helping monitor and intercept questionable maritime traffic in important areas around the world.

Of particular importance will be a long-term effort to develop the sorts of officers and NCOs needed for conducting sustained non-combat operations in foreign countries. In short, both Services, but the Air Force in particular, should take the initiative to create a true foreign area officer (FAO) program and career path, along the lines of the Army's program of the same name.

GETTING MORE FROM THE CORPS

Dating back to the development of the Advance Base concept and large-scale amphibious warfare between the world wars, the Marines have a demonstrated history for understanding national priorities and reforming themselves to match those priorities. The present era is no exception. The Marine Corps has adopted a number of innovations dating back to before 9/11, including, for example, forming a Chemical-Biological Response Force and an Anti-Terrorism Brigade to better serve the new grand strategy. The question is whether even more should be done. Two possibilities hold promise - integrating the Marines more completely with the nation's Special Operations Forces (SOF.

The Marine Corps already has a long history of robust cooperation with SOF. When U.S. Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) was originally formed in 1987, the Marine Corps held its distance and did not form a service special operations component as the other services did. Elite Marine units, such as Force Recon companies, were not placed under USSOCOM's control in the same way that Army Special Forces, SEALs and Rangers were provided by their respective services. However, the Marine Corps did create a program to train Marine Expeditionary Units (MEUS) to support and conduct a number of special operations missions, such as direct action and special reconneissance.¹⁰⁶ MEUs with this training were certified as "Special Operations-Capable" but retained their traditional mission of conducting six-month deployments around the world as an emergency response force and lever of diplomatic influence. MEU (SOC) operations routinely incorporated SOF elements before 9/11. Since 9/11, the Marine-SOF relationship has grown even closer. Marine officers have commanded large SOF elements in recent operations, such as Operation Enduring Freedom - Afghanistan and Joint Task Force Horn of Africa, and a Marine officer served for a time as the USSOCOM chief of staff. The Marines have resurrected their Force Recon elements and Air/Naval Gunfire Liaison Companies (ANGLICOS) to Support, inter alia, SOF operations.

However, there may be yet more opportunities to expand Marine-SOF integration in support of the new grand strategy. A key role of the Marine Corps has traditionally been to provide a steady-state presence of three MEUs afloat in the Mediterranean, Western Pacific, and Arabian Gulf at any given time. MEUs are natural partners for SOF units. The battalion of Marines at the heart of the MEU is well suited to serve as a Quick Reaction Force to support small SOF teams in trouble, the MEU's aircraft provide a useful degree of mobility and firepower to SOF units, and the MEU's ships provide off-shore basing (for SOF aircraft and watercraft) and a safe sanctuary in extrems. Furthermore, the MEU's officers and NCOS are world-class trainers and could potentially complement the overstretched reservoir of SOF advisory assistance teams.¹⁰⁷ The promise of the MEU-SOF partnership is therefore easy to see.

¹⁰⁶ A Marine Expeditionary Unit is a task force built around a Ground Combat Element (a reinforced infantry battalion), an Aviation Combat Element (a composite squadron of CH-53E, AH-1W, UH-1N, and AV-8B aircraft), a Combat Service Support Element (a MEU Service Support Group), and a Command Element (joint command and control and all source intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance). An Amphibious Ready Group normally consists of three Navy ships, an Amphibious Assault Ship, an Amphibious Transport Dock, and a Dock Landing Ship. See Marine Corps Order 3120.98 "Policy for Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable)," Washington, DC: Headquarters United States Marine Corps, 25 September 2001.

At present, however, the benefits of the MEU-SOF partnership cannot be fully realized because MEU deployments and SOF operations are not as closely coordinated as they might be. Generally speaking, the patrol locations for each MEU are selected well in advance of the group's departure. Furthermore, this presence is not typically coordinated to coincide with SOF presence on the ground. As a result, MEUs are often poorly positioned to support contingency SOF missions and SOF planners cannot rely on the presence of a MEU, which obliges them to develop plans and training scenarios under the assumption that a MEU will not be available to support a given mission. To remedy this situation, DoD should consider taking four steps:

- First, DoD should consider expanding MEU coverage in the world or, alternately, invest in the capability to surge MEUs or MEUlike assets to support contingency operations.
- Second, DoD should expeditiously implement proposals for a Joint Presence Policy so that, among other needs, Marine Corps and SOF deployments can be more tightly coupled.
- Third, SOF exercises should routinely incorporate MEU assets.

Additionally, the MEU's ships already provide excellent platforms for surveillance and reconnaissance. Beyond the MEU's own assets, it is conceivable that sensors might be developed for aircraft, perhaps uninhabited aerial vehicles (UAVs), capable of operating from the LHDclass ships in the MEU Amphibious Readiness Groups.¹⁰⁸ LHDs resemble small aircraft carriers. Initial research indicates that LHDs could support flight operations by large conventional UAVs such as Global Hawk and Predator only after major modifications to the ships (catapults, arresting wires, barriers, etc.) and the UAVs themselves (arresting gear, strengthened undercarriage, etc.). However, vertical takeoff and landing (VTOL) UAVs such as the HV-11 Eagle Eye tilt-rotor UAV being procured by the Coast Guard and the helicopter-like RQ-8 Fire Scout UAV being procured by the Navy, might be natural candidates for reconnaissance and surveillance operations off LHD-class vessels. This might provide another flexible, persistent, and difficult-to-counter reconnaissance and surveillance option to support American policy in key regions.

SECURITY COOPERATION IN THE NEW SECURITY ENVIRONMENT

The new security environment calls for a greatly expanded security cooperation effort. Security cooperation can help establish the preconditions for a successful transition to democratic rule by inculcating democratic values among convissioned and non-commissioned officers in the host nation military. It also is essential to help emerging democracies deter and defeat external and internal threats.

Security cooperation has been an important part of U.S. foreign and defense policy for nearly a century.¹⁰⁹ The United States has used it to provide material support to allies during wars, to support diplomacy, and to help friendly nations improve their ability to defend against internal and external foes. The United States provides military aid to nations in every region of the globe, funding roughly $4.6 billion in Foreign Military Financing (FMF) and $91 million in International Military Education and Training (IMET) in FY 2004. Yet, 90% of the FMF funds go to just six nations, leaving roughly $500 million for the rest of the world^{.110} Although these programs have been effective in achieving U.S. objectives in the past, they may need to adapt to new circumstances and goals. To defend itself effectively against an evolving global terrorist threat, the United States will need flexible and adaptable policy instruments. In particular, previous distinctions between peacetime and wartime activities have less and less meaning in a world in which terrorists can strike anyplace at anytime.

110 In FY 2004, the top six recipients of military aid were Israel ($2.1b), Egypt ($1.3b), Afghanistan ($364m), Jordan ($204m), Colombia

Advisory and training activities have been particularly constrained by "peacetime" restrictions. Training deployments were typically limited to a few weeks or months, advisors were generally not allowed to accompany their units into combat, advisory organizations were underfunded and under-manned,¹¹¹ and career paths were often unclear or unattractive. In the new security environment, these activities need to be given the highest priority, the best personnel, and significant funding. Mobile training teams that visit host nations for a few weeks or months will continue to be useful. Experience shows, however, that a more prolonged commitment is generally required to have lasting effects. A more successful model used by the British embeds advisors in host nation units for year-long tours. Recent U.S. experience in Iraq and Afghanistan has confirmed the great value of embedding advisors. Embedded advisors share hardships and risks with the host nation forces over many months and, consequently, develop lasting relationships and credibility with the locals.

In the past, the U.S. training and advising focus has been on the host nation land forces and, as discussed in detail previously, this likely will remain a mainstay of U.S. efforts. Air and naval operations were often neglected because the recipient nation lacked an air force or navy or because they were limited in their capabilities. Although the specific requirements will vary, as a general rule, U.S. advising and training should help local forces become adept at joint and combined operations. 112

U.S. combat aviation advisors can make important contributions even where the host lacks an air force. First, combat aviation advisors can help the host nation understand the contribution of air forces to joint operations and help determine the kinds of air capabilities (including unmanned systems) that are appropriate for their needs. This isn't about building smaller versions of the U.S. Air Force but, rather, identifying the capabilities that are the best match for the host nation's security needs. In many cases that may mean procuring simple turbo-prop aircraft, helicopters, and UAVs rather than jet fighters.¹¹³ Second, U.S. aviation advisors can help recipient nation ground force and joint commanders understand how U.S. or other friendly air forces might team with their ground forces to defeat internal or other threats. Combat aviation advisors can also help assisted nations develop the organizations, processes, and electronic connectivity necessary to exploit the advantages that air power brings. To accomplish these more ambitious objectives will, however, require more Air Force personnel

¹¹² A recent example of the great impact that air advising can have was the USAF's training Philippine Air Force helicopter pilots in the use of night vision goggles. Philippine ground force operations against insurgents were severely constrained by the lack of night medevac capability. Most operations were stopped by 14:00 so that there would be little risk of afternoon casualties being stranded overnight. Once the Philippine helicopter pilots were able to fly night missions, it greatly boosted the morale of Philippine troops and resulted in a shift to 24-bour operations. The addition of this seemingly narrow skill fundamentally changed the nature of Philippine joint operations, significantly improving their combat effectiveness against insurgent and terrorist threats. trained as combat aviation advisors and longer tours with the recipient nation's forces.

For littoral nations, naval advising, training, and equipping can be important as well. Naval forces have been active since 9/11 interdicting the movement of terrorists and weapons, but there are simply too many target vessels for the United States and other major navies to monitor. Local and regional coast guards are needed to monitor and board the thousands of small fishing and trading vessels. U.S. naval advisors are key to training these local navies and coast guards in interdiction, boarding and related operations. Local forces using small patrol boats can be highly effective in these missions.

6. POTENTIAL ACTIONS FOR THE DEFENSE DEPARTMENT'S LEADERSHIP

This report began by exploring the implications of a big idea: that under the leadership of this President, and in the presence of growing threats of terrorism and extremism, the United States has embarked upon a strategy of exporting freedom, a strategy that is enormously ambitious in its scope and which will have profound implications for all institutions of government, including, importantly, the Department of Defense. We believe this change in strategy is not only grand in scale some might call it tectonic - but also lasting, for this President has seized on a sentiment that has long roots in American politics and which shaped the views and policies of his immediate predecessors.

Throughout the report, we have attempted to highlight the implications of this strategy for the Department of Defense by considering, first, at the institution as whole, and then its key components, the military services. The case set forth in this report calls for more highly differentiated roles among the services yet increasingly interdependent forces. It also points to the need for some new or greatly enhanced military capabilities. As the leadership of the Defense Department looks to set strategic direction for the armed forces, we recommend that it consider the following actions. While these recommendations are by no means comprehensive, they focus upon bringing U.S. defense strategy, forces, and capabilities into better alignment with the domands of the nation's new grand strategy and with the types of challenges that our forces are likely to confront in the decades to come.

Several of our suggested actions apply to the Department of Defense as a whole. These include:

 Recast U.S. defense strategy to incorporate "1-n-2-1" as its force sizing construct. Relieve the Army and Marine Corps of the requirement to provide forces for more than one major combat operation at a time.

Bringing stability to troubled nations, training and advising the forces of other countries, and conducting effective operations against insurgents and terrorists are important, complex, and politically charged missions. A greater level of effort is called for here if we and our allies are to make lasting progress against global terrorist threats. The accumulation of recent experience suggests that these missions can be done well by forces whose primary focus is large-scale combat. Changes in the nature of threats posed by regional adversaries allow DoD to reduce the level of ground forces it plans to commit to major combat operations.

Complete the transition of the joint command structure.

Regional commanders need to remain focused on strategic matters, including achieving strategic victory in areas where U.S. forces are engaged. To do so, a more effective joint task force structure needs to be created. Ongoing efforts at U.S. Joint Forces command should be buttressed. Moreover, the joint division of labor among regional commands, global commands, and military services and supporting agencies should be clarified. The concept of a division of labor among users, managers and providers may be useful in guiding this effort.

Complete the effort to realign U.S. global military posture and reevaluate posture on a regular basis.

The overseas posture of U.S. military forces and bases should be a direct reflection of U.S. grand strategy. That is not the case today. Forces and bases will need to be realigned to support new democracies, counter terrorist and insurgent groups, deter and defeat regional adversaries, and dissuade military competition in Asia. Current plans should be implemented and reevaluated regularly to ensure that strategy and posture remain in proper alignment.

Increase investments in promising systems for surveillance and reconnaissance.

It should be the goal of defense planners to put an end to the situation in which sensor systems and the means to interpret the information they acquire are chronically "low-density/high demand" assets. And efforts should be made to accelerate the development of new systems better suited to finding such targets as mobile missiles, nuclear weapons, and small groups of armed combatants.

Holp rebuild the mation's intelligence system — and by implication DoD's intelligence capabilities — by focusing first and foremost on the human dimension.

While new sensors, platforms, and technologies are vital to answering the challenges of the future security environment—and we believe that a thorough reassessment of investment priorities is needed—enabling decisionmakers at the tactical, operational, and strategic levels demands, above all, properlytrained and experienced people throughout the collection, assessment, and dissemination chain. Especially within the four military services, greater numbers of people are needed with the skills to understand the political and social dynamics in troubled regions. And institutional incentives must be put in place to create satisfying career paths that encourage and reward professionalism.

Pursue an aggressive effort to develop and produce more effective defenses against theater ballistic missiles and cruise missiles.

These weapons, whether armed with accurate conventional warheads or nuclear weapons, pose grave obstacles to U.S. power projection operations. Indeed, for the first time since the conclusion of the Cold War, the United States faces the prospect that its forces could be defeated or excluded from the fight. Large concentrations of troops and materiel within range of enemy missiles will be at great risk. And it may prove impossible to mount effective combat operations from even hardened fixed bases. Because of the importance of protecting the civilian populations and infrastructures of allied nations, special emphasis should be placed on developing concepts for layered theater missile defenses that are effective over wide areas. Truly effective defenses will require the fielding of larger numbers of existing TMD systems (e.g., THAAD and Navy SM-3) and one or more additional "layers" of active defense.

Broker three marriages to achieve greater strategic and operational depth and joint tactical proficiency.

Even as diversification among military services and agencies is required to support U.S. grand strategy, new interdependencies need to be forged. We view this as something akin to brokering a new set of marriages among the military services. The process will be difficult, but in our judgment it is essential.

 Marriage 1: Develop and implement plans for air and land forces to train for and to conduct highly integrated operations.

In order to become more strategically deployable and agile on the battlefield, the Army is reducing its organic artillery and increasingly relying on air delivered fires. Recent operations have demonstrated the potential of this concept, but it is far from established as a new way of war. Realistic air-ground exercises and training are rare, procedures for controlling and integrating air operations and ground maneuver are out-dated. The services need to see themselves as mutually enabling partners. Regular joint training, new fire control mechanisms (including investments in new gear for tactical air controllers), and cultural changes will be necessary to realize the potential of the air-ground partnership.

 Marriage 2: Foster wch tighter links among air, naval, and space forces to create a more durable, more effective power projection force.

Without better integrating the capabilities of America's air, naval, and space forces, the U.S. military runs the risk of not having an effective power projection capability against adversaries with ballistic missiles, advanced air defenses, and perhaps nuclear weapons. These links will require more routine training and the development of common command and control procedures and mechanisms.

Marriage 3: Promote a more seamless integration among the Marine Corps and U.S. special operations forces. Just as the Marine Corps could give special operations forces (SOF) more depth by providing combined arms support for sensitive SOF missions, so too could the Marine Corps give SOF more reach by expanding the area and frequency of routine SOF missions and activities. These two branches have too much in common to not exploit the exceptional qualities of both. At the same time, this focus implies less focus on the Marine Corps traditional amphibious missions and much more openness in the SOF community to cooperating with another military branch.

To achieve this goal, just as the Goldwater-Nichols Act created incentives for the best officers to seek joint assignments, the services should change incentive structures at mid- to senior-officer levels to make joint training in these areas a major criterion for promotion to command positions.

 Greatly expand the capacity and competence of forces devoted to combat advisory and training missions.

New democracies and friendly nations threatened by insurgent and terrorist groups will look to the United States for assistance. It is neither desirable nor feasible to send U.S. land combat forces to fight other countries' insurgencies. Rather, the most effective means for DoD to counter terrorist and insurgent groups abroad is to train, equip, advise and assist the forces of friendly governments. The U.S. already possesses first rate combat advisors and trainers in all the services, but their numbers are small, resources limited, and activities greatly restricted. Substantial portions of the "regular" forces must contribute to this vital mission. Although the largest number of advisors will likely come from the Army and Marine Corps. Navy and USAF advisor capabilities need to expand as well. Expanded Foreign Area Officer (FAO) programs in the services are essential to develop the language and cultural understanding necessary to be effective advisors.

Several other recommendations would apply to individual entities within the Department of Defense. These include:

- Direct the Army to explore creating two distinct elements within its tactical structure. One element would specialize in conventional warfighting operations and the other would specialize in stability, support, and advisory operations. Resource constraints will prevent the Army from fully preparing its entire tactical structure for both conventional warfighting and stability operations. By bifurcating its tactical structure, the Army would free the units assigned conventional missions to prepare more fully for warfighting operations and free units assigned to stability operations to prepare more fully for those difficult missions. The result would be that the Army will become more proficient at both.
 - Direct the Army to create doctrine and a professional military education curriculum that places emphasis on stability operations.

Current doctrine and curriculum focus on conventional warfighting to the exclusion of stability operations. This imbalance should be corrected by balancing capstone and operational-level doctrine equally between warfighting and stability operations. Tactical doctrine and training literature will likely need to be bifurcated by mission as well.

 Direct the Air Force to undertake a re-evaluation of its concepts for large-scale power projection operations, assessing in particular the implications for its mix of long- and shortrange platforms.

The Air Force's planned investments in new combat aircraft implicitly reflect the belief that forces will be able to deploy forward and conduct high-tempo operations from air bases in the theater of conflict. Such assumptions seem increasingly unwise. A platform mix that placed greater emphasis on longrange platforms for reconnaissance and strike would provide commanders with more options for basing aircraft in countries less threatened by attack from enemy missiles. It would also provide more 'battle space," allowing defensive systems more opportunities to engage incoming missiles. Longer-range platforms would also be better suited to providing enduring, responsive information and fire support to joint forces on battlefields where enemy forces are less likely to be massed and more likely to encountered episodically.

 Direct U.S. air forces to train more frequently with U.S. SOF and the ground forces of friendly nations to provide operational support during counter-insurgency operations.

In most cases, 9.5. involvement in counterinsurgency operations will be limited to advising, equipping and training. where the threat is particularly great or host nation capabilities limited, the U.S. may want to provide direct operational support. Because a large or highly visible presence can undermine the credibility of the government we seek to support, direct support must be done with minimal footprint. U.S. air forces can provide critical surveillance, strike and lift support in low-key ways, flying from remote bases or even from outside of the assisted country. When combined with competent local ground forces, U.S. air forces can be extremely effective against insurgents. To be effective working with local forces, selected elements from U.S. air forces will need to train with U.S. SOF, USAF terminal attack controllers, and allied ground forces on a regular basis.

Finally, while striving to fix what is broken, the Department of Defense should be careful not to break what is fixed. The U.S. armed forces are the most powerful and successful in the world, perhaps in history. Their dominance of the conventional "force on force" battlefield is so overwhelming that it has, among other things, rendered a whole class of historically troubling scenarios-massed cross-border aggression by large, armored forces-largely obsolete. Maintaining the capabilities that have created this situation is critically important. Continued, selective investment in the areas in which the U.S. currently enjoys "overmatch" will be needed alongside the new initiatives required to solve the nation's emerging security problems.

SUBJECT: RAND Report on Defense Strategy

- You asked that I take a look at Andy Hoehn's recent report to see if there is anything useful in it to include in the ODR. (Tab A)
- The report, A New Division & Labor: Reconsidering American Strategy and Forces to Meet New Challenges, argues that current US grand strategy is to extend freedom and democracy abroad.
 - This "long-awaited replacement for containment," the RAND authors state: requires changes in US defense planning.
- The QDR has adopted a similar theme.

I

- The National Defense Strategy is the QDR's point of departure. Like the RAND report, the Strategy states, "the United States follows a strategy that aims to preserve and extend peace, freedom, and prosperity throughout the world."
- From this common premise, the QDR and the RAND report draw many of the same conclusions about developing capabilities for new missions, sizing and shaping the force, and the need for operational jointness.
- Notably, David Ochmanek of RAND briefed the Deputy Secretary and Vice Chairman on this report in June. The briefing informed our revision of the force planning construct.
- We are currently reviewing Hoehn's paper in detail and will incorporate promising ideas into the QDR Report and Strategic Planning Guidance.

Honorable Donald Rumsfeld secretary of Defense 1000 Defense Pentagon Room 3E880 Weshington, DC 20301-1000

Dear Secretary Rumsfeld

On the wall of your office, there is a picture inscribed to you by the President that says, "Let freedom mign." The picture, and its message are an important symbol of a central challenge of our time.

In the attached report, A New Division of Labor: Reconsidering American Strategy and Forces to Meet New Challenges (DRR-3713-AF), several RAND colleagues and I collaborated to explore what it will mean for the U.S. armed forces to support a rational strategy aimed at exporting freedom.

In the report, we make several points that 1 think merit your attention as you contemplate key choices to be made in the Quadrennial Defense Review. Chief among these are:

- It is imperative that DoD₁ in conjunction with other agencies, undertake sustained efforts to train, equip, advise, and assist the forces of friendly nations seeking to combat terrorist and insurgent groups operating on their territories or in the under governed areas of the world. Properly trained forces and an adequate rotation base will be needed for this effort.
- At the same time, the nation must retain the capability to defeat aggression in more than one region. As adversaries acquire more capable weapons especially nuclear weapons and the means to deliver them extensive modernization will be required.

The question, of course, is how to need: these new requirements in the face of constrained resources. Our recommendation is that DoD adopt a force sizing approach that calls on U.S. ground forces—Army, Marines, and SOF—to provide forces for ongoing stability and advisory operations and a single theater war, while the Navy and Air Force remain sized and equipped primarily to deter ard, if necessary, fight two theater wars, while providing support to ground forces.

The paper makes a number of other important observations, seeking to identify the types of operational capabilities that will be most important for U.S. forces in the

In January 2005, George W. Bush took the oath of office for his second term as President. In his inaugural address, Bush pledged his administration to 'seek and support the growth of democratic movements in every nation and culture, with the ultimate goal of ending tyranny in the world: The spread of freedom and democracy is Bush's answer to the threat of terrorism and extremism.

In a sense, this is a natural American response to a threat to core U.S. interests. The spread of freedom and democracy has been a prominent feature of American policy and culture since the founding of the republic. It had been a key theme of nearly every 20th century presidential administration, and, in fact, animated Wilson and Roosevelt as they sought to shape the outcomes of the two great warn of that century. Moreover, it was a theme that motivated Bush's immediate predecessors, particularly Bill Clinton, and led to American support for emerging democracies in Latin America, East Asia and South Africa, as well as American military involvement in places like the Ealkans.

But, in another sense, it represents a radical departure for American foreign and security policy in that this president has demonstrated a willingness not only to stand up to America's foes but also discomfit its friends. In pursuit of this strategy, the President is prepared to foster near-term instability, sometimes by force of arms, to secure longer-term goals.

And it is here that Bush parts company with his predecessors, for in defining America's response to terrorism and extremism Bush has made clear that the United States, in at least some circumstances, will no longer simply allow despotic governments to collapse under their own weight, but instead will take action to hasten or cause their demise. He will no longer excuse the policies of repression on the part of America's friends, but will call for thoroughgoing reforms.

This expansive strategy has important implications for the entire national security establishment. and diplomats and warriors alike are adapting to new demands and seeking to define new roles. Should the nation continue to pursue this strategy - and we believe that there is every evidence that it will² - the institutions of government will, of necessity, change and adapt, much as they did when America accepted new global responsibilities at the end of World Way II.

A HIM GRAND STRATEON

Just as in the late 1940s, when it took the emergence of a clear and compelling threat - Soviet expansionism backed by powerful military forcea - to induce the United States to shake off ita tradition of isolationism and adopt the strategy of containment, so too did the shock of 9/11 prompt this administration to put forth a far-reaching strategy. That strategy, the centerpiece of which is to promote democracy and freedom abroad, is the necessary response to conditions that can breed serious threat. to the security of Americans worldwide and to their way of life. Although this strategy has roots in all post-Cold War administrations, it has been given clearest expression and the most expansive objectives by the current administration. As a consensus forms around the idea that the United States and its allies must work to extend the reach of freedom and democracy, this strategy will be recognized as the long-avaited replacement for containment.

The strategy is nothing if not ambitious. Pursuing this strategy in earnest will require the United States and its partners to marshal substantial levels of resources and to apply them with patience and commitment. It will also call for the involvement of, and significant chauges to, America's armed forces.

COMPLICY IN THE POST POST-COLD NAR NORLD

U.S. grand strategy, along with the challenges posed by adversaries of the United States and its allies, will place dounting demands on America's military forces. Three developments in particular present novel and stern challenges to the armed forces of the United States:

² In judging that the nation will continue on this path for the foreseeable future, we also recognize that different kenders will interpret this strategy in different ways. Just as 'containment' was modified and adapted over the long years of the Cold War, so too will the strategy to export freedom and democracy take many forms.

- Terrorist and insurgent groups. The spread of technological know-how related to means of killing—ranging from powerful explosive devices to biological and, ultimately, nuclear weapons—is giving small groups the means to kill thousands. By harnessing militant interpretations of Islam to new means of violence, Al Queda and other such groups have created a virulent threat that all responsible states must act to defeat.
- Regional powers with nuclear weapons. States such as North Korea and Iran appear determined to acquire nuclear weapons. Indeed, it is possible that North Korea already possesses a limited nuclear arsenal. They and others, including terrorist organizations, have access to a world-wide supply chain that is not entirely under the control of states. If adversaries such as these succeed in fielding deliverable nuclear weapons the implications for regional stability and the security of our allies will be highly troubling. The leadership in Pyongyang, for example, seems to understand that if it precipitate. a WEF on the Korean peninsula the ultimata outcome of that war will be the end of its regime. This reality has had a salutary deterrent effect on the regime's actions, if not its rhetoric. But unless a way is found to neutralize North Korea's nuclear weapons or its ability to deliver them, its leaders may come to believe that they could impose unacceptable costs on the United States and its allies and that regime change as a U.S.objective may be achievable only at prohibitive cost and risks. Such a shift in Pyongyang's calculus would be very dangerous.
- Military competition in Asia. Arguably, U.S. forces can prevail over the conventional forces of any nation, provided the full panoply of U.S. capabilities can be brought to bear. Recognizing this, regional adversaries are focusing their military investments on capabilities that can be used to impede U.S. forces from getting to the fight. China, with its burgeoning economy and growing technical sophistication, is fielding the most impressive set of such capabilities. They include advanced air defenses, numerous systems for attacking surface ships, anti-satellite weapons, and, most troublingly, large numbers of accurate, long-range strike systems, principally conventionally-armed ballistic and cruise missiles. These weapons can not only keep U.S. expeditionary forms at bay for significant periods; they can also be wed to coerce and intimidate the leadership of Taiwan and other states in the region.

MEETING THESE CHALLENGES

These developments carry several implications for U.S. defense planners:

- First, a substantial and sustained level of effort to suppress terrorist and insurgent groups abroad is essential if the nation is to make headway against the threats they pose. For DoD, this will sometimes take the form of direct action to locate and capture or kill terrorists and insurgents. Far more often, it will involve undertaking indirect actions, principally long-tern, "hands on' efforts to train, equip, advise, and assist the forces of nations that seek to suppress these groups on their own territory.
- Related to this, U.S. forces will be called upon to help bring stability and security to nations struggling to implement democratic reforms. This will involve providing support to defeat internal threats and shoring up regional security to cope with external enemies.
- U.S. forces must develop and field far more effective means for locating and destroying or otherwise neutralizing nuclear weapons and their means of delivery.
- U.S. forces must also ensure that they can overcome modern anti-access weapons and methods. Of particular urgency is the need for highly effective, wide-area defenses against theater ballistic missiles. Cruise missiles also arO a concern.

America's new grand strategy, combined with daunting challenges emanating from states and from non-state adversaries, will impose extraordinary demands on 0.5. armed forces. These demands will stress our forces both qualitatively (by creating needs for new types of capabilities) and quantitatively (calling for unprecedented levels of commitment abroad). At the same time, fiscal realities are placing strict limits on the resources available not only for defense but also for important related activities, such as counter-proliferation initiatives, international development assistance, and public diplomacy. This combination of an ambitious strategy, a dynamic and challenging threat environment, and tightly constrained resources creates a profound dilemma for military strategists and force planners. How might these factors be reconciled?

RECLATING U.S. DEFENSE STRATEGY

The Defense Department first needs to define a new defense strategy that embraces the goal of extending the reach of democracy and freedom. Above all, this means placing far more emphasis than heretofore on the missions of security cooperation (i.e., training, equipping, advising, and assisting the security forces of friendly states) and stability operations. Practically speaking, this means that the force sizing criterion posited by the defense strategy of 2001--"1-4-2-1"--should berecast.³ Specifically, the nation no longer will be able to limit itsday-to-day activities and posture to only four regions where it isdeemed to have important geopolitical interests, as classically defined:Europe, Northeast Asia. the Bast Asian littoral, and the MiddleEast/Southwest Asia. It is now clear that seemingly remote areas suchas Afghanistan and Sucian, the Horn of Africa and the Babel, CentralAsia, the Philippines and Indonesia can gestate serious threats not only to regional peace and stability but also to America and Americans. In fact, the number of places in which U.S. and allied forces might be called upon to engage in promoting stability, democracy, and military competence is indeterminate. Thus, in our assessment, "4" has, of necessity, became "n."

³ The criterion that became known as "1-4-2-1' directed the armed forces to be prepared simultaneously to defend the United States (1), deter aggression and coercion in four critical regions (4), swiftly defeat aggression in two overlapping conflicts (2) while preserving the option to impose a change of regime in one of the conflicts (1). It also stated that the forces were to be able to conduct a limited number of smaller-scale contingency operations. For further elaboration, see the Defense Department's Quadrennial Defense Review Report, 2001.

At the same time, familiar missions of deterring aggression, redressing imbalances in military power, and defeating aggression through large-scale power projection operations have not diminished in importance. In fact, these missions are, in some ways, becoming more challenging. Protecting U.S. mational interests in Southwest Mia, East Asia, and elsewhere will demand that U.S. forces, in conjunction with those of our allies, remain able to defeat the forces of adversary states in more than one region. This is critically important not only to credibly deter our adversaries but also to assure our allies and partners. Needless to say. U.S. forces must also do whatever is necessary to protect the United states itself.

The question then becomes whether and bow DoD can support a demanding "1-n-2-1" criterion for sizing and shaping the armed forces of the United States.

A HEW DIVISION OF LABOR

The first thing to recognize is that the demands of "1-n-2-1" need not apply equally to every branch of the anneed forces. The imperative to promote stability, democracy, and military competence abroad will place the greatest demands on America's land forces—the Army and the Marine Corps—and special operations forces. Air and naval forces can make important contributions to these missions, principally in the areas of intelligence, lift, base operating support or offshore bases, and humanitarian support. But by and large, these missions call for substantial commitments of ground forces to work directly with their host country counterparts. By the same token, the most plausible major combat operations that U.S. forces might be called upon to fight in the years to come--involving Iran, China (over Taiwan) and North Korea--call for heavy commitments of air and naval forces and, in most cases, smaller numbers of U.S. land forces.

Given limited resources, including limited numbers of people. the nation's leaders face a choice of where to apportion risk: either they can continue to ask U.S. ground forces to prepare for major wars and risk a diminished ability to operate effectively in stability, support, and advisory missions, or they can focus a much larger proportion of (1.8. ground forces on such mission8 and accept the risk of shifting some of the burden for large force-on-force contingencies to air and naval forces. Given the demands of America's NEW grand strategy, the certainty of the need for stability, support, and advisory missions, and recent advances in the ability to use precision firepower to shape the battlefield to the ground commander's advantage, we suggest that DoD's leaders consider the latter course. Such a decision would place a greater sustained level of ground force effort in stability, support, and advisory missions by relieving the Army and the Marine Corps of the requirement to provide forces for more than one major war. Taking this step would help to keep overall demands on the forces of these two services manageable. Equally important, it would also permit substantial portions of both services to optimize training, doctrine, and equipment on the development of forces for manpower intensive operations now demanded by America's new grand strategy. Under this construct, the Navy and Air Force would retain their focus on largescale power projection operations, though both services will be called upon to provide essential enabling capabilities to stability. support, and advisory missions. Both will also need to place much greater emphasis on defeating enemies armed with nuclear weapons and with more sophisticated anti-access capabilities than have heretofore been encountered.

POTENTIAL ACTIONS

The foregoing consideration suggest that DoD's leaders should consider the following actions to bring America's defense capabilities in better alignment with the nation's new grand strategy:

• Recast U.S. defense strategy to incorporate "1-n-2-1" u the aggregate statement of demand for U.S. forces. Consider relieving the Army and Marine Corps of the requirement to provide forces for more than one major combat operation at a time. Because of the need for ground force. to conduct a broad range of stability, support, and advisory operations, this should not prompt a decrease in the force structure σ_r end strength of either the Army or Marine Corps, but it will affect the recruiting, training, and equipping and operating temps of sizable portions of both services.

- Complete the transition of the joint command structure. Given that U.S. forces will likely be committed for extended periods of time to operation6 in HERNy areas of the world, regional commanders need to remain focused on strategic matters, including achieving strategic victory in areas where U.S. forces are engaged. Regional commanders should not be involved in overseeing day-to-day activities in any single location. To relieve them of this requirement, more affective joint task force headquarters are needed. Ongoing efforts at U.S. Joint Forces Command should be buttressed as a step toward this goal. Moreover, the joint division of labor among regional commands, global commands, and military services and supporting agencies should be further clarified.
- Complete the effort to realign U.S. global military posture. Forces and supporting infrastructure need to be realigned to support operations aimed at new democracies, countering terrorist and insurgent groups, deterring and defeating regional adversaries, and dissuading military competition in Asia. Current plans should be implemented and reavaluated regularly to ensure that strategy and posture remain in proper alignment.
- Increase investments in promising systems for surveillance and reconneissance. It should be the goal of defense planners to put an end to the situation in which sensor systems and the means to interpret the information they acquire are chronically treated as "low-density/high demand' assets. And efforts should be made to accelerate the development of new systems better suited to finding such targets as mobile missiles, nuclear weapons, and small groups of armed combatants.

Belp to rebuild the nation's intelligence system--and by implication DoD's intelligence capabilities--by focusing first and forenest on the human dimension. More and better-trained people are needed throughout the collection, asses—t, and dissemination chain. Greater numbers of people with skills to understand the political and social dynamics of troubled regions are especially needed. Automation can be an aid, but is not a solution in and of itself.

Pursue an aggressive effort to develop and produce more effective defenses against theater ballistic and cruise missiles. Truly effective defenses will require the fielding of larger numbers of existing systems for theater missile defense, both land- and sea-based, and deploying one or more additional 'layers' of active defense.

Broker three "marriages" to achieve greater strategic and operational depth and joint tastical proficiency. Even as greater differentiation among the capabilities of the military services is called for, new interdependencies need to be forged. We view this as something akin to brokering a new set of marriages among the military services.

- Marriage 1: Develop and implement plans for air and land forces to train more frequently to conduct highly integrated operations. This will entail, inter alia, more frequent regular joint training and new fire control procedures.
- Marriage 2: Foster tighter links among air, navel, and space forces to create a mure robust, more effective power projection force. These links will require much more routine training and the development of more effective common commend and control procedures and mechanisms.

- Marriage 3: Promote a more seamless integration between the Marine Corps and U.S. special operations forces. The Marine Corps' regular presence in troubled parts of the world should become the planning basis for sensitive special operations missions.

To achieve these goals, just as the Goldwater-Nichols Act created incentives for the best officers to seek joint assignments, the services should change incentive structures to make involvement in joint training in these areas a major criterion for promotion to more senior positions.

- Greatly argand the capacity and compatence of forces devoted to oombat advisory and training missions. The most effective means for DoD to counter terrorist groups abroad is to train, equip, advise, and assist the forces of friendly governments. substantial portions of the 'membar' forces must contribute to this vital mission. Although the largest number of advisors will likely come from the Army and Marine Corps, Navy and Air Force advisory capabilities need to expand as well. Foreign Area Officer (FAO) programs in the services are essential to develop the language skills and cultural understanding necessary to be effective analysts and advisors. Although each of the services is expanding their respective programs to address these needs. substantially more will need to be dona.
- Direct the Army to explore creating two distinct elements within its structure capable of carrying cut traditional and non-traditional missions. One el — i would specialize in conventional warfighting operations and the other element would specialize in stability, support, and advisory operations. Training constraints will prevent the Army from fully preparing its entire tactical structure for both conventional warfighting and stability operations. By realigning its structure, the Army would free the units assigned to conventional missions to Prepare more fully for warfighting operations and free units assigned to stability, support, and advisory operations to prepare more fully for those difficult missions. The result will be that the Army should become more proficient at both.

- Direct the Army to create doctrine and professional military education curricule devoted to the conduct of stability, support, and advisory operations.
- Direct the Air Force to undertake fundamental re-evaluation of its concepts for large-scale power projection operations, assessing is particular the implications for its six of longand short-range platforms. The USAF's planned investments in new combat aircraft implicitly reflect the belief that forces will be able to deploy forward and conduct high-tempo operations from air bases within or close to the theater of conflict. Such assumptions seem increasingly ill-advised. A platform MiX that placed greater emphasis on long-range reconnaissance and strike would provide commanders with mine options for basing aircraft in areas less threatened by attack from enemy missiles and would provide a more robust means for striking adversaries and providing support to forces on the battlefield.

Direct U.S. air forces to train more frequently with U.S. SOF and the ground forces of friendly nations to provide operational support during counter-insurgency operations. U.S. air forces can provide friendly forces with critical surveillance, strike, and lift support without imposing a large footprint in the host country. When combined with competent local ground forces, they can be extremely effective against insurgents.

Finally, while striving to fix what is broken, the Department of Defense should be careful not to break what is fixed. The U.S. armed forces are the mOST powerful and Successful in the world, perhaps in history. Their dominance of the conventional 'force on force' battlefield is so overwhelming that it has, among other things, rendered a whole class of historically troubling scenarios--massed cross-border aggression by large. armored forces--largely obsolete. Naintaining the capabilities that have created this situation is critically important. Continued, selective investment in the areas in which the United States currently enjoys 'overmatch' will be needed alongside the new initiatives required to solve the nation's emerging security problems.

SUBJECT : Securing the Airport Road

Steve Hadley says that Bartlett told him one of the things that really worries journalists in Baghdad is that they dread the road trip to or from the airport. He said if it was corrected it could conceivably affect things positively.

He suggested that if there is some way to secure the airport road, it might make a big difference. Do you agree? Let's get an assessment from George Casey.

Thanks.

FOUO DRAFT WORKING PAPERS

SUBJECT: USG Responsibilities for Homeland Security Situation Today:

Since September 11,2001, the Administration has made substantial progress to protect America from terrorist attacks. Among other measures, we have established:

- The Department of Homeland Security.
- A National Bio-Defense Strategy and stockpiles of biological vaccines.
- United States Northern Command.
- The Terrorist Threat Integration Center.

As a result of these and other initiatives, America is safer today than it was prior to the 9/11 attacks, although we must continue to improve America's homeland security.

Homeland Security Roles and Responsibilities:

However, in the event of another major terrorist attack, we will certainly ask ourselves what else we might have done to prevent it or mitigate its consequences. One issue that concerns me is that roles and responsibilities for homeland security are still not as clearly defined as they might be. Now that we have almost two years of experience with the Department of Homeland Security and the new USG organization for homeland security, it may be an appropriate time to evaluate the assignment of roles and responsibilities for homeland security. We also need to consider how we can better educate the American people about those roles and responsibilities. It is important for the American people to have realistic expectations about the role the U.S. Armed Forces might play in dealing with terrorist attacks inside the United States, as defined both by law and executive policy. I am reminded of the polls taken in the 1990s which showed that Americans believed erroneously that we have a capability to shoot down a ballistic missile targeting the U.S. There is a great deal the U.S. military can do in the event of a terrorist attack, but there are limits on that capability and—as a matter of law and policy—there may be things we should not do.

Across the USG, there have been several major homeland security exercises over the past several years. We could use their results to evaluate where gaps may exist in the USG homeland security concept and determine if changes are warranted with respect to statutes, authorities, policies, missions, resources and training, etc. Evaluations, moreover, could help to identify any legal considerations that might limit the military from providing support to any Lead Federal Agency and that could impede effective command and control.

Homeland security roles and responsibilities are spread among the Departments of Homeland Security, Justice, State, the FBI, the CIA and various other U.S agencies:

- To stop terrorists from coming across our borders.
- To stop terrorists from coming through U.S. ports.
- To stop terrorists from hijacking aircraft inside or outside the United States.

DRAFT WORKING PAPERS FOUO 11-L-0559/OSD/53471

To seek out or arrest terrorists inside the United States.

DOD does not have primary responsibility for any of those functions. Its traditional role has been largely restricted to the following:

- Defend the U.S. homeland against foreign threats and attacks from outside the U.S. (NORTHCOM/NORAD/PACOM).
- Protect U.S. DoD military forces and facilities located within the United States.
- Support designated lead federal agencies, as specifically directed by the President, to include:
 - > "Render safe" a nuclear weapon located inside the United States.
 - Provide support for designated "National Special Security Events," such as the G-8 Summit, Democratic and Republican Conventions, the Super Bowl, etc., and
 - Serve as a sector-specific agency for the U.S. defense industrial base in accordance with Homeland Security Presidential Directive-7.

Comment:

In the event of a catastrophic nuclear or hiological attack on the temtory of the United States, the following would likely occur, as it did on September 11,2001:

1) The first calls for help will be to DoD to immediately take action, but

DRAFT WORKING PAPERS FOUO 11-L-0559/OSD/53472

FOUO DRAFT WORKING PAPERS

technically not in the lead role, only in a supporting role. Specifically, DoD may be asked to undertake the very responsibilities DoD has not been assigned or funded to do, and therefore may not have organized, trained or equipped to do, and

- 2) When the dust settles, the American people may well ask why DoD did not:
 - Prevent the attack, even though that is the legal responsibility of others and it is not DoD's assignment;
 - > Instantaneously respond to mitigate the attack after it occurs.

Recommendation:

Given this situation, the Administration may wish to undertake a quick review to provide recommendations for the following types of questions:

- What might be done to better organize, allocate and rearrange responsibilities among USG agencies to ensure that the right capabilities and assets will address key problems?
- Should we further organize, train and equip the National Guard and the reserves for homeland defense?
- Has DoD allocated sufficient force structure to homeland defense, particularly to prevent or mitigate the consequences of a catastrophic attack?
- What might be done to better inform the Members of Congress, the press, and the American people of the decided upon allocation of responsibilities, so the current confusion as to roles and responsibilities can be reduced?

Homeland Security Assignments and Remonsibilities:

DOD never has had, and does not have today, primary U.S. Government responsibility:

- To stop terrorists from coming across our borders.
- To stop terrorists from coming through U.S. ports,
- To stop terrorists from hijacking aircraft inside or outside the United States.
- To seek out or attest terrorists inside the United States.

Responsibility for those functions rests with the Department of Homeland Security, Department of Justice and the FBL, the Department of State, CIA and various other U.S. agancies.

Not only does DOD not have primary responsibility for any of these functions, DoD is expressly limited by fideral law, including the Posse Comitatus Act, from more than that participating in most U.S. law enforcement activities.

DOD's role has been, and is loday, restricted to the following:

 Vehicle Armor

Mr. President,

I listened to your statementafter our NSC meeting this morning. You were asked about armor. You responded as indicated on the top of this attached page. I checked with our folks, and have attached more current information. I now have the military committed to not having U.S. Servicemen driving any vehicles in Iraq that do not have the appropriate armor after February 15, except for those vehicles that are used solely within protected military compounds.

I'm pushing them to accelerate the February 15 date to January 30.

The way we are doing it is:

- 1) To get more steel and more people in Iraq to bolt the protective armor on the vehicles;
- 2) changing tactics, techniques and procedures, so fewer vehicles have to be out;
- 3) reducing the number of locations that materials have to be dispersed to; and/or hiring more contact drivers.

The long and the short of it is, by February 15,2005, or sconer, the goal is to not have any U.S.military vehicles in Iraq, outside of a protected military compound, unless they have appropriate armor. I'll keep you posted.

Respectfully,

The statement made by the President at the press conference is factually correct...but the emendment below offers a more complete view.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I have looked at the statistics on that, and we have stepped up the production of armored Humvees significantly. The other issue is the rearmament of existing – of vehicles that are now in theater, vehicles that require a different armament structure then that which they initially were manufactured with. And I am told that those vehicles will be armed up by midsummer of 2005. And what I know is, is that the Defense Department is working expeditiously with private contractors and with our military to get these vehicles armed up.

Dear Minister

I have enclosed a copy of President Bush's recent address to the National Endowment for Democracy, where he spoke about our global fight against terrorism. As the President said,

In this new century, fi-eedom is once again assaulted by enemies determined to roll back generations of democratic progress. Once again, we're responding to a global campaign of fear with a global campaign of freedom. And once again, we will see freedom's victory.

I believe that in his speech, the President has stated the issue, and identified what is at stake. Your government's assistance in this global struggle is critical if the world is to defeat the enemies of peace and win the war against terrorism. I hope you will have a chance to read the President's remarks. I would welcome your reaction.

Ronald Reagan Building and InternationalTrade Center Washington, D.C.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all. (Applause.) Thank you all. Please be seated. (Applause.) Thank you for the warm welcome. I'm honored once again to be with the supporters of the National Endowment for Democracy. Since the day President Ronald Reagan set out the vision for this Endowment, the world has seen the swiftest advance of democratic institutions in history. And Americans are proud to have played our role in this great story.

Our nation stood guard on tense borders; we spoke for the rights of dissidenta and the hopes of exile; we aided the rise of new democracies on the ruins of tyranny. And all the cost and sacrifice of that struggle has been worth it, because, from Latin America to Europe to Asia, we've gained the peace that freedom brings.

Vin, Iwant to thank you for inviting me back. And thank you for the short introduction. (Laughter.) I appreciate Carl Gershman. Iwant to welcome former Congressman Dick Gephardt, who is a board member of the National Endowment for Democracy. It's good to see you, Dick. And I appreciate Chris Cox, who is the Chairman of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, and a board member for the National Endowment of Democracy, for being here, as well. I want to thank all the other board members.

Lappreciate the Secretary of State, Condi Rice, who has joined us -- alongside her, Secretary of Defense Don Rumsfeld. Thank you all for being here. I'm proud, as well, that the newly sworn-in Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, the first Marine ever to hold that position, is with us today -- General Peter Pace. (Applause.) Ithank the members of the Diplomatic Corps who are here, as well.

Recently our country observed the fourth anniversary of a great evil, and looked back on a great turning point in our history. We still remember a proud city covered in smoke and ashes, a fire across the Potomac, and passengers who spent their final moments on Earth fighting the enemy. We still remember the men who rejoiced in every death, and Americans in uniform rising to duty. And we remember the calling that came to us on that day, and continues to this hour: We will confront this mortal danger to all humanity. We will not tire, or rest, until the war on terror is won. (Applause.)

The images and experience of September the 11th are unique for Americans. Yet the evil of that morning has reappeared on other days, in other places -- in Mombasa, and Casablanca, and Riyadh, and Jakarta, and Istanbul. and Madrid, and Beslan, and Taba, and Netanya, and Baghdad, and elsewhere. In the past few months, we've seen a new terror offensive with attacks on London, and Sharm el-Sheikh, and a deadly bombing in Bali once again. All these separate images of destruction and suffering that we see on the news can seem like random and isolated acts of madness; innocent men and women and children have died simply because they boarded the wrong train, or worked in the wrong building, or checked into the wrong hotel. Yet while the killers choose their victims indiscriminately, their attacks serve a clear and focused ideology, a set of beliefs and goals that are evil, but not insane.

Some call this evil Islamic radicalism; others, militant Jihadism; still others, Islamo-fascism. Whatever it's called, this ideology is very different from the religion of Islam. This form of radicalism exploits Islam to serve a violent, political vision: the establishment, by terrorism and subversion and insurgency, of a totalitarian empire that denies all political and religious freedom. These extremists distort the idea of jihad into a call for terrorist murder against Christians and Jews and Hindus -- and also against Muslims from other traditions, who they regard as heretics.

Many militants are part of global, borderless terrorist organizations like al Qaeda, which spreads propaganda, and provides financing and technical assistance to local extremists, and conducts dramatic and brutal operations like September the 11th. Other militants are found in regional groups, often associated with al Qaeda -- paramilitary insurgencies and separatist movements in places like Somalia, and the Philippines, and Pakistan, and Chechnya, and Kashmir. and Algeria. Still others spring up in local cells, inspired by Islamic radicalism, but not centrally directed. Islamic radicalism is more like a loose network with many branchesthan an army under a single command. Yet these operatives, fighting on scattered battlefields, share a similar ideology and vision for our world.

We know the vision of the radicals because they've openly stated it -- in videos, and audiotapes, and letters, and declarations, and websites. First, these extremists want to end American and Western influence in the broader Middle East, because we stand for democracy and peace, and stand in the way of their ambitions. Al Qaeda's leader, Osama bin Laden, has called on Muslims to dedicate, quote, their "resources, sons and money to driving the infidels out of their lands." Their tactic to meet this goal has been consistent for a quarter-century: They hit us, and expect us to run. They want us to repeat the sad history of Beirut in 1983, and Mogadishu in 1993 -- only this time on a larger scale, with greater consequences.

Second, the militant network wants to use the vacuum created by an American retreat to gain control of a country, a base from which to launch attacks and conduct their war against non-radical Muslim governments. Over the past few decades, radicals have specifically targeted Egypt, and Saudi Arabia, and Pakistan, and Jordan for potential takeover. They achieved their goal, for a time, in Afghanistan. Now they've set their sights on Iraq. Bin Laden has stated: "The whole world is watching this war and the two adversaries. It's either victory and glory, or misery and humiliation." The terrorists regard Iraq as tile central front in their war against humanity. And we must recognize Iraq as the central front in our war on terror.

Third, the militants believe that controlling one country will rally the Muslim masses, enabling them to overthrow all moderate governments in the region, and establish a radical Islamic empire that spans from Spain to Indonesia. With greater economic and military and political power, the terrorists would be able to advance their stated agenda: to develop weapons of mass destruction, to destroy Israel, to intimidate Europe, to assault the American people, and to blackmailour government into isolation.

Some might be tempted to dismiss these goals as fanatical or extreme. Well, they are fanatical and extreme -- and they should not be dismissed. Our enemy is utterly committed. As Zarqawi has vowed, 'We will either achieve victory over the human race or we will pass to the eternal life." And the civilized world knows very well that other fanatics in history, from Hitler to Stalin to Pol Pot, consumed whole nations in war and genocide before leaving the stage of history. Evil men, obsessed with ambition and unburdened by conscience, must be taken very seriously -- and we must stop them before their crimes can multiply.

Defeating the militant network is difficult, because it thrives, like a parasite, on the suffering and frustration of others. The radicals exploit local conflicts to build a culture of victimization, in which someone else is always to blame and violence is always the solution. They exploit resentful and disillusioned young men and women, recruiting them through radical mosques as the pawns of terror. And they exploit modern technology to multiply their destructive power. Instead of attending faraway training camps, recruits can now access online training libraries to learn how to build a roadside bomb, or fire a rocket-propelled grenade -- and this further spreads the threat of violence, even within peaceful democratic societies.

The influence of Islamic radicalism is also magnified by helpers and enablers. They have been sheltered by authoritarian regimes, allies of convenience like Syria and Iran, that share the goal of hurting America and moderate Muslim governments, and use terrorist propaganda to blame their own failures on the West and America, and on the Jews. These radicals depend on front operations, such as corrupted charities, which direct money to terrorist activity. They're strengthened by those who aggressively fund the spread of radical, intolerant versions of Islam in unstable parts of the world. The militants are aided, as well, by elements of the Arab news media that incite hatred and anti-Semitism, that feed conspiracy theories and speak of a so-called American "war on Islam" – with seldom a word about American action to protect Muslims in Afghanistan, and Bosnia, Sornalia, Kosovo, Kuwait, and Iraq.

Some have also argued that extremism has been strengthened by the actions of our coalition in Iraq, claiming that our presence in that country has somehow caused or triggered the rage of radicals. I would remind them that we were not in Iraq on September the 11th, 2001 – and el Qaeda attacked us anyway. The hatred of the radicals existed before Iraq was an issue, and it will exist after Iraq is no longer an excuse. The government of Russia did not support Operation Iraqi Freedom, and yet the militants killed more than 180 Russian schoolchildren in Beslan.

Over the years these extremists have used a litany of excuses for violence -- the Israeli presence on the West Bank, or the US. military presence in Saudi Arabia, or the defeat of the Taliban, or the Crusades of a thousand years ago. In fact, we're not facing a set of grievances that can be soothed and addressed. We're facing a radical ideology with inalterable objectives: to enslave whole nations and intimidate the world. No act of ours invited the rage of the killers -- and no concession, bribe, or act of appeasement would change or limit their plans for murder.

On the contrary: They target nations whose behavior they believe they can change through violence. Against such an enemy, there is only one effective response: We will never back down, never give in, and never accept anything less than complete victory. (Applause.)

The murderous ideology of the Islamic radicals is the great challenge of our new century. Yet, in many ways, this ftt resembles the struggle against communism in the last century. Like the ideology of communism, Islamic radicalism is elitist, led by a self-appointed vanguard that presumes to speak for the Muslim masses. Bin Laden says his own role is to tell Muslims, quote, "what is good for them and what is not." And what this man who grew up in wealth and privilege considers good for poor Muslims is that they become killers and suicide bombers. He assures them that his — that this is the road to paradise-- though he never offers to go along for the ride.

Like the ideology of communism, our new enemy teaches that innocent individuals can be sacrificed to serve a political vision. And this explains their cold-blooded contempt for human life. We've seen it in the murders of Daniel Pearl, Nicholas Berg, and Margaret Hassan, and many others. In a courtroom in the Netherlands, the killer of Theo Van Gogh turned to the victim's grieving mother and said, "I do not feel your pain -- because I believe you are an infidel." And in spite of this veneer of religious rhetoric, most of the victims claimed by the militants are fellow Muslims.

When 25 Iraqi children are killed in a bombing, or Iraqi teachers are executed at their school, or hospital workers are killed caring for the wounded, this is murder, pure and simple -- the total rejection of justice and honor and morality and religion. These militants are not just the enemies of America, or the enemies of Iraq, they are the enemies of Islam and the enemies of humanity. (Applause.) We have seen this kind of shameless cruelty before, in the heartless zealotry that led to the gulags, and the Cultural Revolution, and the killing fields.

Like the ideology of communism, our new enemy pursues totalitarian aims. Its leaders pretend to be an aggrieved party, representing the powerless against imperial enemies. In truth they have endless ambitions of imperial domination, and they wish to make everyone powerless except themselves. Under their rule, they have banned books, and desecrated historical monuments, and brutalizedwomen. They seek to end dissent in every form, and to control every aspect of life, and to rule the soul, itself. While promising a future of justice and holiness, the terrorists are preparing for a future of oppression and misery.

Like the ideology of communism, our new enemy is dismissive of free peoples, claiming that men and women who live in liberty are weak and decadent. Zarqawi has said that Americans are, quote, "the most cowardly of God's creatures." But let's be clear: It is cowardice that seeks to kill children and the elderly with car bombs, and cuts the throat of a bound captive, and targets worshipers feaving a mosque. It is courage that liberated more than 50 million people. It is courage that keeps an untiring vigil against the enemies of a rising democracy. And it is courage in the cause of freedom that once again will destroy the enemies of freedom. (Applause.)

And Islamic radicalism, like the ideology of communism, contains inherent contradictions that doom it to failure. By fearing freedom -- by distrusting human creativity, and punishing change, and limiting the contributions of half the population -- this ideology undermines the very qualities that make human progress possible, and human societies successful. The only thing modern about the militants' vision is the weapons they want to use against us. The rest of their grim vision is defined by a warped image of the past -- a declaration of war on the idea of progress, itself. And whatever lies ahead in the war against this ideology, the outcome is not in doubt: Those who despise freedom and progress have condemned themselves to isolation, decline, and collapse. Because free peoples believe in the future, free peoples will own the future. (Applause.)

We didn't ask for this global struggle, but we're answering history's call with confidence, and a comprehensive strategy. Defeating a broad and adaptive network requires patience, constant pressure, and strong partners in Europe, the Middle East, North Africa, Asia and beyond. Working with these partners, we're disrupting militant conspiracies, destroying their ability to make war, and working to give millions in a troubled region of the world a hopeful alternative to resentment and violence.

First, we're determined to prevent the attacks of terrorist networks before they occur. We're reorganizing our government to give this nation a broad and coordinated homeland defense. We're reforming our intelligence agencies for the incredibly differit task of tracking enemy activity, based on information that often comes in small fragments from widely scattered sources, here and abroad. We're acting, along with the governments from many countries, to destroy the terrorist networks and incapacitate their leaders. Together, we've killed or captured nearly all of those directly responsible for the September the 11th attacks; as well as some of bin Laden's most senior deputies; al Qaeda managers and operatives in more than 24 countries; the mastermind of the USS Cole bombing, who was chief of al Qaeda operations in the PersianGulf; the mastermind of the Jakarta and the first Bali bombings; a senior Zarqawi terrorist planner, who was planning attacks in Turkey; and many of al Qaeda's senior leaders in Saudi Arabia.

Overall, the United States and our partners have disrupted at least ten serious al Qaeda terrorist plots since September the 11th, including three al Qaeda plots to attack inside the United States, We've stopped at least five more al Qaeda efforts to case targets in the United States, or infiltrate operatives into our country. Because of this steady progress, the enemy is wounded -- but the enemy is still capable of global operations. Our commitment is clear: We will not relent until the organized international terror networks are exposed and broken, and their leaders held to account for their acts of murder.

Second, we're determined to deny weapons of mass destruction to outlaw regimes, and to their terrorist allies who would use them without hesitation. The United States, working with Great Britain, Pakistan, and other nations, has exposed and disrupted a major black-market operation in nuclear technology led by A.O. Khan. Libya has abandoned its chemical and nuclear weapons programs, as well as long-range ballistic missiles. And in the last year, America and our partners in the Proliferation Security Initiative have stopped more than a dozen shipments of suspected weapons technology, including equipment for Iran's ballistic missile program.

This progress has reduced the danger to free nations, but has not removed it. Evil men who want to use horrendous weapons against us are working in deadly earnest to gain them. And we're working urgently to keep weapons of mass destruction out of their hands.

Third, we're determined to deny radical groups the support and sanctuary of outlaw regimes. State sponsors like Syria and Iran have a long history of collaboration with terrorists, and they deserve no patience from the victims of terror. The United States makes no distinction between those who commit acts of terror and those who support and harbor them, because they're equally as guilty of murder. (Applause.) Any government that chooses to be an ally of terror has also chosen to be an enemy of civilization. And the civilized world must hold those regimes to account.

Fourth, we're determined to deny the militants control of any nation, which they would use as a home base and a launching pad for terror. For this reason, we're fighting beside our Afghan partners against remnants of the Taliban and their al Qaeda allies. For this reason, we're working with President Musharraf to oppose and isolate the militants in Pakistan. And for this reason, we're fighting the regime remnants and terrorists in Iraq. The terrorist goal is to overthrow a rising democracy, claim a strategic country as a haven for terror, destabilize the Middle East, and strike America and other free nations with ever-increasing violence. Our goal is to defeat the terrorists and their allies at the heart of their power -- and so we will defeat the enemy in Iraq.

Our coalition, along with our Iraqi allies, is moving forward with a comprehensive, specific military plan. Area by area, city by city, we're conducting offensive operations to clear out enemy forces, and leaving behind Iraqi units to prevent the enemy from returning. Within these areas, we're working for tangible improvements in the lives of Iraqi citizens. And we're aiding the rise of an elected government that unites the Iraqi people against extremism and violence. This work involves great risk for Iraqis, and for Americans and coalition forces. Wars are not won without sacrifice -- and this war will require more sacrifice, more time, and more resolve.

The terrorists are as brutal an enemy as we've ever faced. They're unconstrained by any notion of our common humanity, or by the rules of warfare. No one should underestimate the difficulties ahead, nor should they overlook the advantages we bring to this fight.

Some observers look at the job ahead and adopt a self-defeatingpessimism. It is not justified. With every random bombing and with every funeral of a child, it becomes more clear that the extremists are not patriots, or resistance fighters -- they are murderers at war with the Iraqi people, themselves.

In contrast, the elected leaders of Iraq are proving to be strong and steadfast. By any standard or precedent of history, Iraq has made incredible political progress -- from tyranny, to liberation, to national elections, to the writing of a constitution, in the space of two-and-a-half years. With our help, the Iraqi military is gaining new capabilities and new confidence with every passing month. At the time of our Fallujah operations 11 months ago, there were only a few Iraqi army battalions in combat. Today there are more than 80 Iraqi army battalions fighting the insurgency alongside our forces. Progress isn't easy, but it is steady. And no fair-minded person should ignore, deny, or dismiss the achievements of the Iraqi people.

Some observers question the durability of democracy in Iraq. They underestimate the power and appeal of freedom. We've heard it suggested that Iraq's democracy must be on shaky ground because Iraqis are arguing with each other. But that's the essence of democracy: making your case, debating with those who you disagree -- who disagree, building consensus by persuasion, and answering to the will of the people. We've heard it said that the Shia. Sunnis and Kurds of Iraq are too divided to form a lasting democracy. In fact, democratic federalism is the best hope for unifying a diverse population, because a federal constitutional system respects the rights and religious traditions of all citizens, while giving all minorities, including the Sunnis, a stake and a voice in the future of their country. It is true that the seeds of freedom have only recently been planted in Iraq -- but democracy, when it grows, is not a fragile flower: it is a healthy, sturdy tree. (Applause.)

As Americans, we believe that people everywhere-- everywhere-- prefer freedom to slavery, and that liberty, once chosen, improves the lives of all. And so we're confident, as our coalition and the Iraqi people each do their part, Iraqi democracy will succeed.

Some observers also claim that America would be better off by cutting our losses and leaving Iraq now. This is a dangerous illusion, refuted with a simple question: Would the United States and other free nations be more safe, or less safe, with Zarqawi and bin Laden in control of Iraq, its people, and its resources? Having removed a dictator who hated free peoples, we will not stand by as a new set of killers, dedicated to the destruction of our own country, seizes control of Iraq by violence.

There's always a temptation, in the middle of a long struggle, to seek the quiet life, to escape the duties and problems of the world, and to hope the enemy grows weary of fanaticism and tired of murder. This would be a pleasant world, but it's not the world we live in. The enemy is never tired, never sated, never content with yesterday's brutality. This enemy considers every retreat of the civilized world as an invitation to greater violence. In fraq, there is no peace without victory. We will keep our nerve and we will win that victory. (Applause.)

The fifth element of our strategy in the war on terror is to deny the militants future recruits by replacing hatred and resentment with democracy and hope across the broader Middle East. This is a difficult and long-term project, yet there's no alternative to it. Our future and the future of that region are linked. If the broader Middle East is iefl to grow in bitterness, if countries remain in misery, while radicals stir the resentments of millions, then that part of the world will be a source of endless conflict and mounting danger, and for our generation and the next. If the peoples of that region are permitted to choose their own destiny, and advance by their own energy and by their participation as free men and women, then the extremists will be marginalized, and the flow of violent radicalism to the rest of the world will slow, and eventually end. By standing for the hope and freedom of others, we make our own freedom more secure.

America is making this stand in practical ways. We're encouraging our friends in the Middle East, including Egypt and Saudi Arabia, to take the path of reform, to strengthen their own societies in the fight against terror by respecting the rights and choices of their own people. We're standing with dissidents and exiles against oppressive regimes, because we know that the dissidents of today will be the democratic leaders of tomorrow. We're making our case through public diplomacy, stating clearly and confidently our belief in self-determination, and the rule of law, and religious freedom, and equal rights for women, beliefs that are right and true in every land, and in every culture. (Applause.)

As we do our part to confront radicalism, we know that the most vital work will be done within the Islamic world, itself. And this work has begun. Many Muslim scholars have already publicly condemned terrorism, often citing Chapter 5, Verse 32 of the Koran, which states that killing an innocent human being is like killing all humanity, and saving the life of one person is like saving all of humanity. After the attacks in London on July the 7th, an imam in the United Arab Emirates declared, "Whoever does such a thing is not a Muslim, nor a religious person." The time has come for all responsible Islamic leaders to join in denouncing an ideology that exploits Islam for political ends, and defiles a noble faith.

Many people of the Muslim faith are proving their commitment at great personal risk. Everywhere we have engaged the fight against extremism, Muslim allies have stood up and joined the fight, becoming partners in a vital cause. Afghan troops are in combat against Taliban remnants. Iraqi soldiers are sacrificing to defeat al Qaeda in their own country. These brave citizens know the stakes -- the survival of their own liberty, the future of their own region, the justice and humanity of their own tradition -- and that United States of America is proud to stand beside them. (Applause.)

With the rise of a deadly enemy and the unfolding of a global ideological struggle, our time in history will be remembered for new challenges and unprecedented dangers. And yet the fight we havejoined is also the current expression of an ancient struggle, between those who put their faith in dictators, and those who put their faith in the people. Throughout history, tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that murder is justied to serve their grand vision -- and they end up alienating decent people across the globe. Tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that regimented societies are strong and pure -- until those societies collapse in corruption and decay. Tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that free men and women defeat them.

We don't know the course of our own struggle -- the course our own struggle will take -- or the sacrifices that might lie ahead. We do know, however, that the defense of freedom is worth our sacrifice. We do know the love of freedom is the mightiest force of history. And we do know the cause of freedom will once again prevail.

May God bless you. (Applause.)

Washington D.C., October 6,2005

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all. Thank you all. Please be seated. Thank you for the warm welcome. I'm honored once again to be with the supporters of the National Endowment for Democracy. Since the day President Ronald Reagan set out the vision for this Endowment, the world has seen the swiftest advance of democratic institutions in history. And Americans are proud to have played our role in this great story.

Our nation stood guard on tense borders; we spoke for the rights of dissidents and the hopes of exile; we aided the rise of new democracies on the ruins of tyranny. And all the cost and sacrifice of that struggle has been worth it, because, from Latin America to Europe to Asia, we've gained the peace that freedom brings.

In this new century, freedom is once again assaulted by enemies determined to roll back generations of democratic progress. Once again, we're responding to a global campaign of fear with a global campaign of freedom. And once again, we will see freedom's victory.

Vin, I want to thank you for inviting me back. And thank you for the short introduction. I appreciate Carl Gershman. I want to welcome former Congressman Dick Gephardt, who is a board member of the National Endowment for Democracy. It's good to see you, Dick. And I appreciate Chris Cox, who is the Chairman of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, and a board member for the National Endowment of Democracy, for being here, as well. I want to thank all the other board members.

I appreciate the Secretary of State. Condi Rice, who has joined us -- alongside her. Secretary of Defense Don Rumsfeld. Thank you all for being here. I'm proud, as well, that the newly sworn-in Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, the first Marine ever to hold that position, is with us today -- General Peter Pace. I thank the members of the Diplomatic Corps who are here, as well.

Recently our country observed the fourth anniversary of a great evil, and looked back on a great turning point in our history. We still remember a proud city covered in smoke and ashes, a fire across the Potomac, and passengers who spent their final moments on Earth fighting the enemy. We still remember the men who rejoiced in every death, and Americans in uniform rising to duty. And we remember the calling that came to us on that day, and continues to this hour: We will confront this mortal danger to all humanity. We will not tire, or rest, until the war on terror is won.

The images and experience of September the 11th are unique for Americans. Yet the evil of that morning has reappeared on other days, in other places -- in Mombasa, and Casablanca, and Riyadh, and Jakarta, and Istanbul, and Madrid, and Beslan, and Taba, and Netanya, and Baghdad, and elsewhere. In the past few months, we've seen a new terror offensive with attacks on London, and Sharm el-Sheikh, and a deadly bombing in Bali once again. All these separate images of destruction and suffering that we see on the news can seem like random and isolated acts of madness; innocent men and women and children have died simply because they boarded the wrong train, or worked in the wrong building, or checked into the wrong hotel. Yet while the killers choose their victims indiscriminately, their attacks serve a clear and focused ideology, a set of beliefs and goals that are evil, but not insane.

Some call this evil Islamic radicalism; others, militant Jihadism; still others, Islamo-fascism. Whatever it's called, this ideology is very different from the religion of Islam. This form of radicalism exploits Islam to serve a violent, political vision: the establishment, by terrorism and subversion and insurgency, of a totalitarian empire that denies all political and religious freedom. These extremists distort the idea of jihad into a call for terrorist murder against Christians and Jews and Hindus -- and also against Muslims from other traditions, who they regard as heretics.

Many militants are part of global, borderless terrorist organizations like al Qaeda, which spreads propaganda, and provides financing and technical assistance to local extremists, and conducts dramatic and brutal operations like September the 11th. Other militants are found in regional groups, often associated with al Qaeda -- paramilitary insurgencies and separatist movements in places like Somalia, and the Philippines, and Pakistan, and Chechnya, and Kashmir, and Algeria. Still others spring up in local cells, inspired by Islamic radicalism, but not centrally directed. Islamic radicalism is more like a loose network with many branches than an army under a single command. Yet these operatives, fighting on scattered battlefields, share a similar ideology and vision for our world.

We know the vision of the radicals because they've openly stated it -- in videos, and audiotapes, and letters, and declarations, and websites. First, these extremists want to end American and Western influence in the broader Middle East, because we stand for democracy and peace, and stand in the way of their ambitions. Al Qaeda's leader, Osama bin Laden, has called on Muslims to dedicate, quote, their "resources, sons and money to driving the infidels out of their lands." Their tactic to meet this goal has been consistent for a quarter-century: They hit us, and expect us to run. They want us to repeat the sad history of Beirut in 1983, and Mogadishu in 1993--only this time on a larger scale, with greater consequences.

Second, the militant network warts to use the vacuum created by an American retreat to gain control of a country, a base from which to launch attacks and conduct their war against non-radical Muslim governments. Over the past few decades, radicals have specifically targeted Egypt, and Saudi Arabia, and Pakistan, and Jordan for potential takeover. They achieved their goal, for a time, in Afghanistan. Now they've set their sights on Iraq. Bin Laden has stated "The whole world is watching this war and the two adversaries. It's either victory and glory, or misery and humiliation." The terrorists regard Iraq as the central front in their war against humanity. And we must recognize Iraq as the central front in our war on terror.

Third, the militants believe that controlling one country will rally the Muslim masses, enabling them to overthrow all moderate governments in the region, and establish a radical Islamic empire that spans from Spain to Indonesia. With greater economic and military and political power, the terrorists would be able to advance their stated agenda: to develop weapons of mass destruction, to destroy Israel, to intimidate Europe, to assault the American people, and to blackmail our government into isolation.

Some might be tempted to dismiss these goals as fanatical or extreme. Well, they are fanatical and extreme -- and they shouldnot be dismissed. Cor enemy is utterly committed. As Zarqawi has vowed, "We will either achieve victory over the human race or we will pass to the eternal life." And the civilized world knows very well that other fanatics in history, from Hitler to Stalin to Pol Pot, consumed whole nations in war and genocide before leaving the stage of history. Evil men, obsessed with ambition and unburdened by conscience, must be taken very seriously -- and we must stop them before their crimes can multiply.

Defeating the militant network is difficult, because it thrives, like a parasite, on the suffering and frustration of others. The radicals exploit local conflicts to build a culture of victimization, in which someone else is always to blame and violence is always the solution. They exploit resentful and disillusioned young men and women, recruiting them through radical mosques as the pawns of terror. And they exploit modem technology to multiply their destructive power. Instead of attending faraway training camps, recruits can now access online training libraries to learn how to build a roadside bomb, of fire a rocket-propelled grenade -- and this further spreads the threat of violence, even within peaceful democratic societies.

The influence of Islamic radicalism is also magnified by helpers and enablers. They have been sheltered by authoritarian regimes, allies of convenience like Syria and Iran, that share the goal of hurting America and moderate Muslim governments, and use terrorist propaganda to blame their own failures on the West and America, and on the Jews. These radicals depend on front operations, such as corrupted charities, which direct money to terrorist activity. They're strengthened by those who aggressively fund the spread of radical, intolerant versions of Islam in unstable parts of the world. The militants are aided, as well, by elements of the Arab news media that incite hatred and anti-Semitism, that feed conspiracy theories and speak of a so-called American "war on Islam" -- with seldom a word about American action to protect Muslims in Afghanistan, and Bosnia, Somalia, Kosovo, Kuwait, and Iraq.

Some have also argued that extremism has been strengthened by the actions of our coalition in Iraq, claiming that our presence in that country has somehow caused or triggered the rage of radicals. I would remind them that we were not in Iraq on September the 11th, 2001 -- and al Qaeda attacked us anyway. The hatred of the radicals existed before Iraq was an issue, and it will exist after Iraq is no longer an excuse. The government of Russia did not support Operation Iraqi Freedom, and yet the militants killed more than 180 Russian schoolchildrenin Beslan.

Over the years these extremists have used a litany of excuses for violence -- the Israeli presence on the West Bank, or the U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia, or the defeat of the Taliban, or the Crusades of a thousand years ago. In fact, we're not facing a set of grievances that can be soothed and addressed. We're facing a radical ideology with inalterable objectives: to enslave whole nations and intimidate the world. No act of ours invited the rage of the killers -- and no concession, bribe, or act of appeasement would change or limit their plans for murder.

On the contrary: They target nations whose behavior they believe they can change through violence. Against such an enemy, there is only one effective response: We will never back down, never give in, and never accept anything less than complete victory.

The murderous ideology of the Islamic radicals is the great challenge of our new century. Yet, in many ways, this fight resembles the struggle against communism in the last century. Like the ideology of communism, Islamic radicalism is elitist, led by a self-appointed vanguard that presumes to speak for the Muslim masses. Bin Laden says his own role is to tell Muslims, quote, "what is good for them and what is not." And what this man who grew up in wealth and privilege considers good for poor Muslims is that they become killers and suicide bombers. He assures them that his -- that this is the road to paradise -- though he never offers to go along for the ride.

Like the ideology of communism, our new enemy teaches that innocent individuals can be sacrificed to serve a political vision. And this explains their cold-blooded contempt for human life. We've seen it in the murders of Daniel Pearl, Nicholas Berg, and Margaret Hassan, and many others. In a courtroom in the Netherlands, the killer of Theo Van Gogh turned to the victim's grieving mother and said, "I do not feel your pain -- because I helieve you are an infidel." And in spite of this veneer of religious rhetoric, most of the victims claimed by the militants are fellow Muslims.

When 25 Iraqi children are killed in a bombing, or Iraqi teachers are executed at their school, or hospital workers are killed caring for the wounded, this is murder, pure and simple -- the total rejection of justice and honor and morality and religion. These militants are not just the enemies of America, or the enemies of Iraq, they are the enemies of Islam and the enemies of humanity. We have seen this kind of sharneless eruelty before, in the heartless zealotry that led to the gulags, and the Cultural Revolution, and the killing fields.

Like the ideology of communism, our new enemy pursues totalitarian aims. Its leaders pretend to be an aggrieved party, representing the powerless against imperial enemies. In truth they have endless ambitions of imperial domination, and they wish to make everyone powerless except themselves. Under their rule, they have banned books, and desecrated historical monuments, and brutalized women. While promising a future of justice and holiness, the terrorists are preparing for a future of oppression and misery.

Zarqawi has said that Americans are, quote, "the most cowardly of God's creatures." But let's be clear: It is cowardice that seeks to kill children and the elderly with car bombs, and cuts the throat of a bound captive, and targets worshipers leaving a mosque. It is courage that liberated more than 50 million people. It is courage that keeps an untiring vigil against the enemies of a rising democracy. This is a dangerous illusion, refuted with a simple question: Would the United States and other free nations be more safe, or less safe, with Zarqawi and bin Laden in control of Iraq, its people, and its resources? Having removed a dictator who hated free peoples, we will not stand by as a new set of killers, dedicated to the destruction of our own country, seizes control of Iraq by violence.

There's always a temptation, in the middle of a long struggle, to seek the quiet life, to escape the duties and problems of the world, and to hope the enemy grows weary of fanaticism and tired of murder. This would be a pleasant world, but it's not the world we live in. The enemy is never tired, never sated, never content with yesterday's brutality. This enemy considers every retreat of the civilized world as an invitation to greater violence. In Iraq, there is no peace without victory. We will keep our nerve and we will win that victory.

The fifth element of our strategy in the war on terror is to deny the militants future recruits by replacing hatred and resentment with democracy and hope across the broader Middle East. This is a difficult and long-term project, yet there's no alternative to it. Our future and the future of that region are linked. If the broader Middle East is left to grow in bitterness, if countries remain in misery, while radicals stir the resentments of millions, then that part of the world will be a source of endless conflict and mounting danger, and for our generation and the next. If the peoples of that region are permitted to choose their own destiny, and advance by their own energy and by their participation as free men and women, then the extremists will be marginalized, and the flow of violent radicalism to the rest of the world will slow, and eventually end. By standing for the hope and freedom of others, we make our own freedom more secure.

America is making this stand in practical ways. We're encouraging our friends in the Middle East, including Egypt and Saudi Arabia, to take the path of reform, to strengthen their own societies in the fight against terror by respecting the rights and choices of their own people. We're standing with dissidents and exiles against oppressive regimes, because we know that the dissidents of today will be the democratic leaders of tomorrow. We're making our case through public diplomacy, stating clearly and confidently our belief in self-determination, and the rule of law, and religious freedom, and equal rights for women, beliefs that are right and true in every land, and in every culture.

As we do our part to confront radicalism, we know that the most vital work will be done within the Islamic world, itself. And this work has begun. Many Muslim scholars have already publicly condemned terrorism, often citing Chapter 5, Verse 32 af the Koran, which states that killing an innocent human being is like killing all humanity, and saving the life of one person is like saving all of humanity. After the attacks in London on July the 7th, an imam in the United Arab Emirates declared, "Whoever does such a thing is not a Muslim, nor a religious person." The time has come for all responsible Islamic leaders to join in denouncing an ideology that exploits Islam for political ends, and defiles a noble faith.

Many people of the Muslim faith are proving their commitment at great personal risk. Everywhere we have engaged the fight against extremism, Muslim allies have stood up and joined the fight, becoming partners in a vital cause. Alghan troops are in combat against Taliban remnants. Iraqi soldiers are sacrificing to defeat al Qaeda in their own country. These brave citizens know the stakes --- the survival of their own liberty, the future of their own region, the justice and humanity of their own tradition  and that United States of America is proud to stand beside them.

With the rise of a deadly enemy and the unfolding of a global ideological struggle, our time in history will be remembered for new challenges and unprecedented dangers. And yet the light we have joined is also the current expression of an ancient struggle, between those who put their faith in dictators, and those who put their faith in the people. Throughout history, tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that murder isjustified to serve their grand vision -- and they end up alienating decent people ACTOSS the globe. Tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that regimented societies are strong and pure -- until those societies collapse in corruption and decay. Tyrants and would-be tyrants have always claimed that free men and women are weak and decadent -- until the day that free men and women defeat them.

We don't know the course of our own struggle -- the course our own struggle will take -- or the sacrifices that might lie ahead. We do know, however, that the defense of freedom is worth our sacrifice. We do know the love of freedom is the mightiest force of history. And we do know the cause of freedom will once again prevail.

May God bless you.

Recommendations: Open Source

- USD(I) designate DIA as Executive Agent for oversight, planning and (most) direct execution
 - Separately budget so that it does not compete with "core business" of the Executive Agent
 - Fund for the central procurement resolution of intellectual property rights
 - Consider "industrial funding" model for open-source-analytic and other valueadded products; Executive Agent would qualify the vendors
- Fund demonstrations of linking and e-business paradigms on Intelink TS and S
- Change the lanes in the road so that every single source agency produces two-source integrated product ...e.g., SIGINT and open source, or geo-spatial and open source
- Design the enterprise-wide data architecture to support and exploit linkages provided by open source

[FBIS Transcribed Text]

TOKYO (Nikkei) -- Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi is expected to discuss the realignment of U.S. forces in Japan when he meets with U.S. President George W. Bush in New York on Sept. 21.

Koizumi is scheduled to travel to New York to attend the annual U.N. General Assembly following visits to Brazil and Mexico.

Specifically, Japan will seek to have local interests reflected in these plans through such measures as reducing the burden borne by communities hosting U.S. military installations. In addition, Koizumi will ask that U.S. military forces in Japan maintain their deterrence capabilities.

In bilateral director-general-level discussions with foreign affairs and defense officials at the end of August, Japan expressed its intention to present as early as this year a policy response to the planned U.S. military realignment.

The meeting between Koizumi and Bush is expected to establish a foundation for discussions before the bilateral military realignment talks begin in earnest.

On the expansion of the U.N. Security Council, Koizumi will explain Japan's bid to seek entry into the group without changing the country's war-renouncing Constitution. Koizumi hopes to win Bush's support on the matter.

Subject: the army is too small-newt for secdef, depsecdef from newt 6/04/04

it is untenable to argue the Army is the right size

it is a direct contradiction of the Secretary's warning at West Point that we are in the early stages of a long war it is impossible for average Americans to believe that the Army is the right size but we have to rely on reservists and guardsmen on a continuing basis and we now have to extend service involuntarily do not care what the studies and higher ups are telling you as an Army brat who went through the Eisenhower reductions in forces in the late 1950s as a child this combination of events is going to weaken the Army finally, it is impossible to explain to the American people why the Army is the right size when their neighbors are called up and service is involuntarily extended

I cannot defend the current size and when asked I am going to say the Army should be larger

this is a repetition of the 1960 Nixon mistake of defending America's strength against Kennedy's charge of a missile gap--the country decided Kennedy was right even though he was wrong for the first time in decades Republicans are now on the weakness side of a defense issue and giving the Democrats an easy way to be on the prodefense side of more strength.

You should call for a significant increase in Army end strength and a significant increase in the Army budget to cover that cost without eating into the rest of the Army's program

if this is a long war then let's start acting like its a real war and budget accordingly to repeat: I personally cannot defend the smaller Army position and I would support a substantial increase in both Army strength and the Army budget this is both a national security and a political issue and the adminstration is wrong on both

Because we are in a war we can do things we knew we needed to for a long time but always found a reason not to.

This is not an argument against more end strength, although I am not persuaded that's the right answer and I only have to listen to the chief of staff of the army on that one.

But if we did get an increase in end strength, we would lose some of the impetus to do the very things that we are doing because we never had an impetus until now.

Restructuring in Europe and korea are good things, and long overdue.

Restructuring the active and reserve balance is overdue, although we probably did not know that until now.

Getting our civil service system redesigned to make it more flexible and less dependent upon activity duty military is a good thing, although we never would have achieved that legislative initiative without the pressure on end strength.

I don't know if we need more end strength or not. If after we have done all these other things, we find we still do, then we should ask for it. But even accepting your argument that simply being in a war demands a larger army, it is not clear to me how we would use it if we had it and I know that if we had it a lot of these other things might not happen.

If your concern is our footprint in Europe and korea, then we just have a basic difference of views on whether it makes sense for us to continue maintain all those divisions so committed. That is a quite different consideration, it seems to me.

SUBJECT: Navy - Coast Guard Authorities

As we move forward toward creating a Maritime NORAD structure to deal with homeland security on the seas, it makes sense to sort out the specific authorities between the Navy and Coast Guard.

Please do a thorough review of the current relationship, with particular focus on homeland defense, and send up proposals that make the most sense for both departments. We should also look at the larger relationship between the Sea Services across the board – combat coordination, interaction overseas, acquisition, command and control arrangements and so forth.

Thanks.

Sir,

The first photo is the average lights during a 1½ month period before the war. The second is a one month average after the war, The third is a one night image that shows the night after the attack on the oil line that closed down the Bayji Power plant. It shows how quickly the majority of power was restored.

SUBJECT: Overhead Costs for Pentagon Memorial

I am a little worried about overhead costs related to the Pentagon Memorial fundraising effort. I think we better get a very good grip on exactly how much people are being paid to help raise money for the fund.

As you know, there have been problems in New York over this issue, and it has been the case in other instances related to charitable activities.

Once you tell me that, we may want to see if we agree that that is an appropriate percentage or amount. If it is not, we will want to fix it. If it is – it may be that we will want to get one or two people – possibly me – to pay all of the overhead, so we can say that every dollar anyone gives will go directly toward the Memorial, because the overhead has been covered separately.

Let me know what you think.

Thanks.

Please give me a copy of the subcommittees of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees. 1 want to look at how they are organized. And maybe privately suggest some different organizations at some point to Duncan Hunter and John Warner.

I have a feeling they are organized for the way we used to look at the Department of Defense, instead of the way we ought to be looking at it. Maybe that would help.

Statement on Butler Report

Prime Minister Tony Blair has given his response to the Butler Review in the House of Commons.

[check against delivery]

Lord Butter's Report is comprehensive, thorough; and I thank the members of his Committee and their staff for all their hard work in compiling it. We accept fully the Report's conclusions.

The Report provides an invaluable analysis of the general threat in respect of WMD; of the potential acquisition of WMD by terrorists; and though it devotes much of its analysis to Iraq, it also goes into detail on the WMD threat posed by Iran, Libya, North Korea and A Q Khan. Some of the intelligence disclosed is made available for the first time and gives some insight into the reasons for the judgements I and other Ministers have been making. I hope the House will understand if I deal with it in some detail.

The halimark of the Report is its balanced judgements.

The Report specifically supports the conclusions of Lord Hutton's inquiry about the good faith of the intelligence services and the Government in compiling the September 2002 dossier.

But it also makes specific findings that the dossier and the intelligence behind it should have been better presented, had more caveats attached to it, and been better validated.

It reports doubts which have recently arisen on the 45 minute intelligence and says in any event it should have been included in the dossier in different terms; but it expressly supports the intelligence on Iraq's attempts to procure uranium from Niger in respect of Iraq's nuclear ambitions.

The Report finds that there is little - if any - significant evidence of stockpiles of readily deployable weapons.

But it also concludes that Saddam Hussein did indeed have:

- a. 'the strategic intention of resuming the pursuit of prohibited weapons programmes, including if possible its nuclear weapons programme, when United Nations inspection regimes were relaxed and sanctions were eroded or lifted.
- b. In support of that goal, was carrying out illicit research and development, and procurement, activities, to seek to sustain its indigenous capabilities.
- c. Was developing ballistic missiles with a range longer than permitted under relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions;*

Throughout the last 18 months, throughout the rage and ferment of the debate over Iraq, there have been two questions.

One is an issue of good faith, of integrity.

This is now the fourth exhaustive inquiry that has dealt with this issue. This report, like the Hutton inquiry, like the report of the ISC before it and of the FAC before that, has found the same thing.

11-L-0559/OSD/53645

http://www.number-10.gov.uk/print/page6109.asp

No-one lied. No-one made up the intelligence. No-one inserted things into the dossler against the advice of the intelligence services.

BLAIR:

Everyone genuinely tried to do their best in good faith for the country in circumstances of acute difficulty. That issue of good faith should now be at an end.

But there is another issue. We expected, I expected to find actual usable, chemical or biological weapons shortly after we entered Iraq. We even made significant contingency plans in respect of their use against our troops. UN Resolution 1441 in November 2002 was passed unanimously by the whole Security Council, including Syria, on the basis Iraq was a WMD threat. Lord Butler says in his report:

"We believe that it would be a rash person who asserted at this stage that evidence of Iraqi possession of stocks of biological or chemical agents, or even of banned missiles, does not exist or will never be found."

But I have to accept: as the months have passed, it seems increasingly clear that at the time of invasion Saddam did not have stockpiles of chemical or biological weapons ready to deploy.

The second issue is therefore this: even if we acted in perfectly good faith, is it now the case that in the absence of stockpiles of weapons ready to deploy, the threat was misconceived and therefore the war was unjustified?

I have searched my conscience, not in a spirit of obstinacy; but in genuine reconsideration in the light of what we now know, in answer to that question. And my answer would be: that the evidence of Saddam's WMD was indeed less certain, less well-founded than was stated at the time. But I cannot go from there to the opposite extreme. On any basis he retained complete strategic intent on WMD and significant capability; the only reason he ever let the inspectors back into Iraq was that he had 180,000 US and British troops on his doorstep; he had no intention of ever co-operating fully with the inspectors; and he was going to start up again the moment the troops and the inspectors departed; or the sanctions eroded. And I say further: that had we backed down in respect of Saddam, we would never have taken the stand we needed to take on WMD, never have got the progress for example on Libya, that we achieved; and we would have left Saddam in charge of Iraq, with every malign intent and capability still in place and every dictator with the same intent everywhere immeasurably emboldened.

As I shall say later: for any mistakes, made, as the Report finds, in good faith I of course take full responsibility, but I cannot honestly say I believe getting rid of Saddam was a mistake at all. Iraq, the region, the wider world is a better and safer place without Saddam.

The Report begins by an assessment of intelligence and its use in respect of countries other than Iraq. It points out that in respect of Libya, the intelligence has largely turned out to be accurate especially in respect of its nuclear weapons programmes; and those are now being dismantled. In respect of Iran, the Report says Iran is now engaged with the IAEA, though there remain 'clearly outstanding issues about Iran's activities'.

About North Korea, the Report concludes that it 'is now thought to be developing missiles capable of delivering nuclear weapons as far away as continental US and Europe'.

The Report goes on at para 99: 'North Korea is a particular cause for concern because of its willingness to sell ballistic missiles to anyone prepared to pay in hard currency'.

The Report also discloses the extent of the network of A Q Khan, the Pakistani former nuclear scientist. This network is now shut down largely through US and UK intelligence work, through Pakistani cooperation and through the dialogue with Libya.

The Report then reveals for the first time the development of the intelligence in respect of the new global terrorism we face. In the early years, for example, in the JIC assessment of October 1994, the view was that the likelihood of terrorists acquiring or using chemical, biological or nuclear weapons was, whilst theoretically possible, highly unlikely.

However, as the name and activities of Usama Bin Laden became better known, the JIC started to change its earlier assessment. In November 1998, it said:

[UBL] has a long-standing interest in the potential terrorist use of CBR materials, and recent intelligence suggest his ideas about using toxic materials are maturing and being developed in more detail. ... There is also secret reporting that he may have obtained some CB material - and that he is interested in nuclear materials.

And in June 1999:

Most of UBL's planned attacks would use conventional terrorist weapons. But he continues to seek chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear material and to develop a capability for its terrorist use.

By mid-July 1999 this view hardened still further:

There have been important developments in [Islamist extremist] terrorism. It has become clear that Usama Bin Laden has been seeking CBRN materials .... The significance of his possession of CB materials is that, in contrast to other terrorists interested in CB, he wishes to target US, British and other interests worldwide.

A series of further assessments to the same effect issued in January 2000, again in August 2000, and in January 2001.

To anyone who wants to know why I have become increasingly focused on the link between terrorism and WMD, I recommend reading this part of the Report and the intelligence assessments received.

It was against this background of what one witness to Lord Butler called the 'creeping tide of proliferation' that the events of September 11th 2001 should be considered. As the Report says, following September 11th, the calculus of the threat changed:

I said in this House on the 14th September 2001:

"We know, that the terrorists would, if they could, go further and use chemical or biological or even nuclear weapons of mass destruction. We have been warned by the events of 11 September. We should act on the warning."

I took the view then and stand by it now that no Prime Minister faced with this evidence could responsibly afford to ignore it. After September 11th, it was time to take an active as opposed to reactive position on the whole question of WMD. We had to close down the capability of the rogue states - usually highly repressive and unstable - to develop such weapons; and the commercial networks such as those of A Q Khan helping them.

Again my clear view was that the country where we had to take a stand was Iraq. Why?

Iraq was the one country to have used WMD recently. It had developed WMD capability and concealed it. Action by UN inspectors and the IAEA had by the mid to late 1990s reduced this threat significantly; but as the Butler Report shows at paras 180-182, by the time the inspectors were effectively blocked in Iraq (at the end of 1998) the JIC assessments were that some CW stocks remained hidden and that Iraq remained capable of a break-out chemical weapons capability within months; a biological weapons capability, also with probable stockpiles; and could have had ballistic missiles capability in breach of UN Resolutions within a year.

This was the reason for military action, taken without a UN Resolution, in December 1998.

Subsequent to that, the Report shows that we continued to receive the JIC assessments on Iraq's WMD capability. For example, in respect of chemical and biological weapons it said in April 2000:

Our picture is limited.

It is likely that Iraq is continuing to develop its offensive chemical warfare (CW) and biological warfare (BW) capabilities.

In May 2001, the JIC assessed, in respect of nuclear weapons:

Our knowledge of developments in Iraq's WMD and ballistic missile programmes since Desert Fox air operations in December 1998 is patchy. But intelligence gives grounds for concern and suggests that Iraq is becoming bolder in conducting activities prohibited by UNSCR 687.

There is evidence of increased activity at Iraq's only remaining nuclear facility and a growing number of

http://www.number-10.gov.uk/print/page6109.asp

reports on possible nuclear related procurement.

In February 2002, the JIC said:

Iraq ... if it has not already done so, could produce significant quantities of BW agent within days. ...

The Report specifically endorses the March 2002 advice to Ministers which states that though containment had been partially successful and intelligence was patchy, Iraq continues to develop WMD:

Iraq has up to 20 650km range missiles left over from the Gulf War. These are capable of hitting israel and the Gulf states. Design work for other ballistic missiles over the UN limit of 150km continues. Iraq continues with its BW and CW programmes and, if it has not already done so, could produce significant quantities of BW agents within days and CW agent within weeks of a decision to do so. We believe it could deliver CBW by a variety of means, including in ballistic missile warheads. There are also some indications of a continuing nuclear programme.

The point I would make is simply this. The dossier of September 2002 did not reach any startling or radical conclusion. It said, in effect, what had been said for several years based not just on intelligence but on frequent UN and international reports. It was the same conclusion that led us to military action in 1998; to maintain sanctions; to demand the return of UN Inspectors.

We published the dossier in response to the enormous Parliamentary and press clamour. It was not, as has been described, the case for war. But it was the case for enforcing the UN will.

In retrospect it has achieved a tame it never achieved at the time. As the Report states at para 310:

It is fair to say at the outset that the dossier attracted more attention after the war than it had done before it. When first published, it was regarded as cautious, and even dull. Some of the attention that it eventually received was the product of controversy over the Government's further dossier of February 2003. Some of it arose over subsequent allegations that the intelligence in the September dossier had knowingly been embellished, and hence over the good faith of the Government. Lord Hutton dismissed those allegations. We should record that we, too, have seen no evidence that would support any such allegations.

The Report at para 333 states that in general the statements in the dossier reflected fairly the judgements of past JIC assessments.

The Report, however, goes on to say that with hindsight making public that the authorship of the dossier was by the JIC was a mistake. It meant that more weight was put on the intelligence than it could bear; and put the JIC and Its Chairman in a difficult position.

It recommends in future a clear delineation between Government and JIC, perhaps by issuing two separate documents. I think this is wise, though I doubt it would have made much difference to the reception of the intelligence at the time.

The Report also enlarges on the criticisms of the ISC in respect of the greater use of caveats about intelligence both in the dossier and in my foreword and we accept that entirely.

The Report also states that significant parts of the intelligence have now been found by SIS to be in doubt.

The Chief of SIS, Sir Richard Dearlove has told me that SIS accepts all the conclusions and recommendations of Lord Butler's report which concern the Service. SIS will fully address the recommendations which Lord Butler has made about their procedures and about the need for the Service properly to resource them. The Service has played, and will continue to play, a vital role in countering worldwide the tide of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Indeed, its successes are evident in Lord Butler's report.

I accept the Report's conclusions in full. Any mistakes made should not be laid at the door of our intelligence and security community. They do a tremendous job for our country.

I accept full personal responsibility for the way the issue was presented and therefore for any errors made.

11-L-0559/OSD/53648

http://www.number-10.gov.uk/print/page6109.asp

As the Report indicates, there is no doubt that at the time it was genuinely believed by everyone that Saddam had both strategic intent in respect of WMD and actual weapons.

I make this further point. On the sparse, generalised and highly fragmented intelligence about Al Qaida prior to September 11th, it is now widely said policy-makers should have foreseen the attacks that materialised on September 11th 2001 in New York. I only ask: had we ignored the specific intelligence about the threat from Iraq, backed up by a long history of international confrontation over it, and that threat later materialised, how would we have been judged?

I know some will disagree with this. There are those who were opposed to the war, remain so now and will forever be in that position.

I only hope that now, after two detailed Parliamentary Committee reports, a judicial inquiry more exhaustive than any has ever been in examining an allegation of impropriety against Government and now this voluminous report, people will not disrespect the other's point of view but will accept that those that agree and those that disagree with the war in Iraq, hold their views not because they are war-mongers on the one hand or closet supporters of Saddam on the other, but because of a genuine difference of judgement as to the right thing to have done.

There was no conspiracy. There was no impropriety.

The essential judgement and truth, as usual, does not lie in extremes.

We all acknowledge Saddam was evil and his regime depraved. Whether or not actual stockpiles of weapons are found, there wasn't and isn't any doubt Saddam used WMD and retained every strategic intent to carry on developing them. The judgement is this: would it have been better or more practicel to have contained him through continuing sanctions and weapons inspections; or was this inevitably going to be at some point a policy that failed? And was removing Saddam a diversion from pursuing the global terrorist threat; or part of it?

I can honestly say I have never had to make a harder judgement. But in the end, my judgement was that after September 11th, we could no longer run the risk; that instead of waiting for the potential threat of terrorism and WMD to come together, we had to get out and get after it. One part was removing the training ground of Al Qaida in Afghanistan. The other was taking a stand on WMD; and the place to take that stand was lraq, whose regime was the only one ever to have used WMD and was subject to 12 years of UN Resolutions and weapons inspections that turned out to be unsetisfactory.

And though in neither case was the nature of the regime the reason for conflict, it was decisive for me in the judgement as to the balance of risk for action or inaction.

Both countries now face an uncertain struggle for the future. But both at least now have a future. The one country in which you will find an overwhelming majority in favour of the removal of Saddam is Iraq.

i am proud of this country and the part it played and especially our magnificent armed forces, in removing two vile dictatorships and giving people oppressed, almost enslaved, the prospect of democracy and liberty.

This Report will not end the arguments about the war. But in its balance and common sense, it should at least help to set them in a more rational light; and for that we should be grateful.

Strategic Planning for 2004 and beyond

National Security planning should always begin with capabilities rather than intentions.

After more than two years of intense effort there is much we still do not know about our opponents, their resources, their capabilities, and their organizational systems.

We have made a lot of progress from 9/11/01 if measured from where we were.

We have an even longer way to go if measured against the scale of the opposition:

the still growing Wahhabist-Deobandi movement in Islam, the continued spread of terrorism as a system of war,

the existence of huge ungoverned areas,

the continued growth of the Gray world of people smuggling, illegal transportation, traditional international crime, narcotics trafficking, and illegal arms dealing, the continued efforts of dictatorships to develop capabilities that threaten America and her allies (including North Korea, Libya, Syria, Iran), the instability of Pakistan with its implications both for Afghanistan and for nuclear weapons proliferation and use, the rise of societal warfare in both Iraq and Afghanistan, the continuing drift of European popular opinion and a number of European governments away from the US, the United Nations Secretariat's reluctance to cooperate with the US and the continuing evolution of weapons of mass murder and weapons of mass destruction.

This is a formidable list of challenges and at the historic level of grand national strategy (to use the World War 2 term) it is not clear whether, with all our efforts, we are making progress toward real security or falling further behind the curve of the challenges.

SEPTEMBER-OCTOBER 2004

Given the uncertainties, it is necessary to plan for a September-October 2004 which could be either violent and painful or peaceful and triumphant. We have no way of knowing which will happen although the uncertainties after 27 months effort make it more likely it will be violent and painful.

This means we should be prepared to offer "blood, sweat, toil and tears" (in Churchill's phrase) so that people are prepared to endure and prevail.

This would require a much more sober and serious State of the Union outlining the long term scale of the conflict and the possibility that it will take a decade to two generations to fully achieve our goal of a safe, healthy, prosperous and free worlds in which America is relatively safe and secure.

People need to be prepared for the possibility of much more violence and much more disruption over time.

If we are measured against a goal of winning by Labor Day 2004, we will have a very difficult argument to make and be politically and in the news media on the defensive for the entire year.

If we are measured against determination to prevail and an honest acceptance that this is hard and going to remain hard we will be able to put our critics on defense because their strategic vision is incompatible with modern reality.

Put simply, if the American people have to choose between an embattled Eagle (even one that is occasionally wounded) and an Ostrich they will choose the Eagle.

Daily and weekly events in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere have to be consistently put in this larger, worldwide, and long term struggle against the forces that would destroy our way of life.

PLANNING AND BUDGETING FOR WAR OR PEACE?

One of the principles emerging from this grimmer, longer range view is that both planning and budgeting have to evolve to take these challenges into account. This war will last for at least a decade. Therefore supplemental budgeting is profoundly misleading.

Planning on a campaign by campaign basis is also an inadequate basis for thinking through needed structures and needed funding.

We desperately need planning for the entire war leading to strategies and structures appropriate to winning the larger, longer conflict.

Budgeting should follow the strategies and structures and force priority setting after the initial thinking has been done. In war time budgeting cannot precede the planning and establish the boundaries of thoughtful planning.

Maintaining a peacetime budgeting process sends the signal to everyone at mid level that it is business as usual despite the hawkish speeches by the political leadership.

Even more dangerously, budgeting within a peacetime framework means that the experts never show the political leadership what is really needed because the budget constraints inhibit planning and establish invisible boundaries of what is politically permissible and therefore what career officials will raise.

We are on the edge of budgeting decisions in defense, intelligence, public information capabilities, and societal assistance that will lengthen the war, weaken our ability to win the war, and increase the risks we are running in the out years. These are peace time rather than war time calculations.

BUDGETING AND AUDITING IN WARTIME

The same peacetime attitudes in budgeting carry over to a system of red tape, auditing and micromanagementwhich will make victory in Iraq and elsewhere vastly more difficult.

At the battle of Isandlwana in 1879 the Zulus massacred over 1500 British and auxiliary troops because they ran out of ammunition. They ran out of ammunition because the quartermaster would not open the oak boxes in advance because they were afraid bullets would be wasted or lost and they would be audited and punished. Wars are best won quickly and decisively. Societal wars require substantially different capabilities than professional military wars but the goal of winning as rapidly as possible persists.

A societal war requires a lot of decentralized decisions including spending decisions. A lot of these spending decisions will inevitably be on non-military activities in a societal campaign.

To the degree an isolated, entrenched bureaucracy can focus on process, paperwork, and audit trails it can destroy the decentralization, flexibility and application of localized judgment that is vital to winning a war.

MOVING TO A SOCIETAL WARFARE STRATEGY IN IRAQ

Our strategy in Iraq must shift to an Iraqi-centric strategy and a decentralized implementation system.

Today we have an American-centric strategy and the CPA is trying to micromanage and to be 'liscally prudent."

These characteristics could lead to a catastrophic decline in support for the Americans during 2004.

Societal wars have a dynamic which is always dangerous for the dominant force.

The burden of safety is on the dominant force.

The burden of prosperity and convenience is on the dominant force.

The burden of psychological acceptance is on the dominant force.

The insurgent simply has to survive to still potentially win and that victory could come with startling speed.

The 'feel good' briefings on 'progress' are symptoms of sincere people who simply do not understand the historic dynamics of societal warfare.

AFGHANISTAN

The strategy in Afghanistan is essentially right but under resourced.

With adequate resourcing and continuing attention to the cross border sanctuary problem in Pakistan Afghanistan should be able to grow into a success story.

The resourcing issue is important both to offset the damage done by the Taliban and to offset the growing illegal resources available through the increase in heroin production.

The civilizing modernizing forces around Karzai have to have more resources than the warlords can aggregate illegally and have to have enough resources to drown the insurgency in the south.

The strategy In Afghanistan is fine but without more resourcing it could still fail.

A SOCIETAL WARFARE DOCTRINE

Societal warfare is the natural response of a determined enemy who cannot compete in the professional military arena.

The American military focuses so intently on winning high technology, high tempo theater campaigns that it has failed to develop a modern doctrine for societal wars.

Societal warfare is inherently Integrated (see below) and operates at a different rhythm and pattern than professional military warfare.

INTEGRATED OPERATIONS

Integrated operations are those activities which reach beyond the military and involve other governmental and non-governmental actors in a systematic manner.

Integrated operations are a much more explicit, coordinated, and accountable system than the current 'interagency process' which is failing to achieve the energy, drive, and decisiveness needed in winning wars. Creating an Integrated Doctrine and getting it accepted by all the major players and implemented by them would be a major step forward in American capability to win societal wars.

SOCIETAL TRANSFORMATION VERSUS STABILITY OPERATIONS

The American Goal in many countries is not a 'stability operation'. The American goal is to transform the society.

The President's calls for democracy in the Middle East are calls to transform civil society in every country in the region.

American goals in subSaharan Africa, Afghanistan, Iraq, and a host of other places are to bring about profound change so people live in safety, health prosperity, and freedom. We need to develop a doctrine and system for 'societal transformation;' to replace the inadequate model of 'stability operations.'

This requires combining the Societal Warfare Doctrine and the Integrated Doctrine with other needed attributes that will be discovered as our efforts progress in this field.

URBANWARFARE/POLICING

One of the most consistent requirements of the future will be a level of sophisticated urban warfare and urban policing that is currently beyond our reach.

Developing this doctrine and capability for urban warfare/policing should be a major goal of DoD in 2004.

INFORMATIONAND PEOPLE TO PEOPLE OPERATIONS

One of our greatest current strategic weaknesses is the inability to communicate our values and concerns to the world at large.

A component of that inability is the absence of the kind of sophisticated people to people relationships which would take advantage of the extraordinary diversity of American society (51,000 Pashtun speaking Americans even more Iraqi Americas for example).

In the age of the internet, cell phone, videoconference and jet airplane America could do stunningly more to mobilize our capabilities as a people and to communicate with and relate to the world.

America is too powerful to ignore.

If America is not effectively communicating and networking, the world will assume the worst about our goals and intentions.

This is one of the highest value areas which the White House should direct and which should bypass all the current bureaucracies to bring in civilian experts and move to a dynamic, high energy, long term strategy in both information and people to people networking.

HOMELAND SECURITY

Homeland Security remains an underestimated challenge.

The rise of weapons of mass murder (largely biological) and the continuing spread of weapons of mass destruction (largely nuclear) makes it imperative that the intensity and drive for Homeland Security match that of combat operations overseas.

It is a fact that we would be hit at home at any time.

It is a fact that the weapons could be biological or nuclear and the casualty rates could be two or three orders of magnitude greater than 9/11 or even higher.

That means America could face losing hundreds of thousands or even millions of people in the very near future.

There is no sense of urgency comparable to that threat.

There are two areas in particular that need dramatic upgrading: responding to a nuclear event and responding to a biological event. Each should have its own focus and its own metrics for success. In addition the Department of Homeland Security should be developing a much more high technology visa and visitation-work card system Secretary Ridge is absolutely on the right track but needs reinforcement to communicate urgency and very high standards of change to the bureaucracies he has now assembled into one agency.

NUCLEAR REACTION AND RECOVERY IN THE UNITED STATES

Some major decisions need to be made about the scale of a potential nuclear event or series of events and the standards of response and recovery we want to establish. There is a direct correlation between rigorous, grim realism before the event and the opportunity to save lives and accelerate the recovery.

The most likely lead agency in this ;process is a restructured National Guard and Reserve force that has some forces dedicated to homeland security and some forces available for overseas use.

The Defense Department is clearly trying to avoid this responsibility. If the President prefers to create new civilian capabilities reporting directly to Homeland Security that would be an acceptable solution.

If the National Guard and Reserve are reshaped to ensure they can meet the crisis of one or more nuclear events that is an acceptable solution.

Everyone should be uncomfortable about the current limited understanding of the amount of engineering, policing and medical resources that would be absorbed in nuclear events here at home.

Lack of clarity in preparation, responsibility and developing the necessary forces will lead to many more American deaths if a nuclear event occurs.

Every day that we fial to clarify this is a day Americans are at risk.

BIOLOGICAL THREATS

Biological threats are the greatest threats America faces.

An engineered flu could potentially kill tens of millions of Americans. The 1918 flu epidemic killed more people than the First World War.

There must be three major steps toward surviving a biological threat:

- the health system including veterinarians and retired doctors and nurses must be connected into an information system in an investment modeled on Eisenhower's National Defense Interstate Highway system (but radically smaller in expense). This investment will dramatically help with every day health requirements and will both improve healthcare and lower costs. Far more important, this investment will make it possible to detect a biological attack at the earliest moment, analyze it in the shortest time, educate the nation's health personnel in virtually real time and minimize the loss of American life;
- 2. There are currently two or three paths toward accelerating vaccine development and production. All should be invested in at the highest rate the research system can absorb the resources. A breakthrough in any of these areas would save a tremendous number of lives if an engineered virus were unleashed in the United States.
- 3. There is a potential within a decade to develop a nanomaterial approach to vaccine production that would enable the United States to respond literally overnight to an attack by mass producing a vaccine in a manner now impossible. Because of the number of lives potentially at risk this should receive the highest possible funding priority and should be monitored at the highest levels in a manner reminiscent of the Manhattan Project (although with far fewer resources).

WAS-INGTON, Oct 23 (AFP)

Former US national security advisor Brent Scowcroft has brought out new evidence of divisions in the Republican establishment over the traq war and particularly the role of Vice President Cick Cheney, New Yorker magazine said.

Scowerest said the promotion of US-style democracy should not be used as an excuse to use force abroad, as he launched a rare open attack on Otieney.

"The real anomaly in the administration is Chency," Scowcroft, the national security advisor under presidents Gerald Ford and the elder George Gush, was quoted as say ag in an interview.

'I consider Cheney a friend -- I've known him for 30 years. But Dick Cheney 3 don't know any more."

Changy is one of the leading White House hawks who, along with Defence Secretary Debald Rumsfeld, are considered chief architects of the 2003 invasion of Iraq. That invasion once had considerable support, but is now broadly unpopular with the US public.

rinue the Winde House seems to have been taken over by hawkish "neoconservatives" Scowcroft said the vice president defies easy calegorization.

i don't think Cick Cheney is a needon, but allied to the core of neocons is that bunch who thought we made a mistake in the first Gulf War, that we should have finished the job.

There was another bunch who were traumatized by 9/11 (the September 11, 250) attacks; and who thought 'The world's going to hell and we've got to show we're not $_{\rm GO(ng)}$  to take this, and 'we've got to respond, and Afghanistan is OK but it's not sufficient."

Scowcroit spoke against completing the downfall of President Saddam Hussen in Iraq during the 1991 Gulf War because "at the minimum we'd be an occupier in a hostife land.

Dur forces would be sniped at by guerrillas and, once we were there, how would we get out What would be the rationale for leaving."

He went ont: "This is exactly where we are now, We own it. And we can't let go. We're getting sniped at. Now, will we win? I think there's a fair chance we'll win. But cok at the cos:"

Scowcroft's criticism of the actions of President George W. Bush are startling, giver, his close friendship with the elder Bush. He also brought Condoleczza Rice, the current secretary of state, into the US government. But relations between the two are now strained.

The New Yorker said that since the beginning of the Iraq war, Scowcroft,  $80_i$  has been "frozen out of the White House".

He made his remarks amid growing signs of Republican dissatisfaction at the bandling of the war.

Lawrence Wilkerson, a former chief of staff to ex-secretary of state Colin Powell, said this week that a "cabal" between Cheney and Rumsfeld had hijacked foreign policy on Iraq and other national security issues. i

Lt. General Thomas G. McInerney - military analyst

Dear Tom,

Monday, October 17,2005

The analysis provided here is only possible after spending countless hours over many years, intimately involved with today's upper echelons of Middle East Shaikhs, Princes, and leaders. The behavioral patterns described here are, unfortunately, commonly observed by anyone unlucky enough to be a member of their inner circle.

I studied body-language analysis and facial analysis under Dr. Narayan Singh, who is among the best pioneers in the biz. Today Narayan is retired from practicing clinical psychology. But he still provides valuable consulting services, while he continues to develop his work far beyond conventional application modalities. His telephone number is(b)(6)

Multiple forms of analysis are invaluable for comprehending aboriginal (i.e. Arab) people who speak other (non-English) languages, because Arabs still share common archetypal body languages with westerners, and can therefor be understood in a common context.

When the DOD asked me to list my language proficiencies, it wasn't enough to list Russian et. al Rather, today's NOC agents and other intelligence analysts should be ideally optimized with training beyond conventional language (Russian, Chinese, Arabic), to include a wide variety of communication skills that permit D.O.D. agents to penetrate and embed within foreign cultures. If invited, I'm available to lift this veil by introducing the DOD to a whole new world of soft, low-intensity content and communication analysis.

There is an element of delusional religiousity in Zarqawi's letter, most apparent in the beginning of his letter. He is using 'religion' as a safety mechanism, to cover his psyche as a serial killer. But even this demeanor fades away as he advances deeply into a psychotic episode of ranting against his adversaries. We saw the same features in Saddam Hussein during the first Gulf War, when he publicly announced that he is descended from the Muslim prophet Mohammed.

It is notable that n this letter, Zarqawi's emotions are not consistent from beginning to end. Zarqawi is easily influenced by external circumstances that are 'triggering events', capable of starting irrational, emotionally-driven 'brush-fires'. A fanatically 'reactive' psychotic who is in the business of responding to external stimuli, often makes intanic mistakes, and thus feels compelled to problem-solve with overwhelming, brute force.

Handlers for Damage-Control:

This man is out of control. Was this the case prior to the U.S.-led coalition against insurgents? Probably not, to the same degree. A person in this condition requires 'handlers' in his entourage, who mitigate disaster by controlling Zarqawi's manifest, psychotic episodes. These advisors are essential to his survival; but they also represent a dilution of Zarqawi's terrorist capacity. If 70% of their energy is dedicated to pure terror, 30% is dedicated to controlling Zarqawi and evading his wrath. Zarqawi's team is likely to be challenged by crises inside Zarqawi's organization, as much as they are challenged by the coalition's hunt for Zarqawi. This 'damage-control' ratio is likely to change over time, to the detriment of Zarqawi's survival capacity.

Zarqawi's inevitable use of brute force against 'trihal' members inside his own organization can only work to his benefit in the short term, until his organization's members learn how to (1) take Zarqawi's position for themselves (2) split apart into a new organization, or (3) kill Zarqawi. A calculated guess would be that he will soon be delivered dead, to coalition forces.

Therefor Zarqawi uses religion (ie. control of God) and money as strategic tools to delay his fate, that will inevitably be caused by enemies within his organization, if not by the U.S.-led coalition.

Post-Traumatic Stress is Toxic, and Effectively Kills An Organization:

Similarly, Niccolo Machiavelli, Adolph Hitler and Yasser Arafat were all individuals suffering from fragmented egos, who nevertheless continued public careers as functional psychotics. Zarqawi belongs to the same club, but his half-life is over. The average life-span of an overtly active, public Mafia Don is about five years, and even Zarqawi may be acutely aware that he is approaching payback time at lightning speed. This is also cause for ambient traumatic stress, which serves to shorten his functional career.

Zarqawi suffers from severe ongoing traumatic stress. Unable to process information overload, real and imagined threats become indistinguishable. One symptom of traumatic stress is his toxic view of all people, beyond his immediate circle of Sunni Muslims. A person who is this toxic, cannot sleep and can't make lucid judgments. Symptoms manifest in his extremely toxic analysis of the Shiite, the Kurds, and others. Zarqawi is already overwhelmed by his own psychosis.

Note: Zarqawi states. "America will not leave (Irag) no matter how numerous it's wounds become and how much of it's blood is spilled". This contradicts Zarqawi's earlier position, that the American public will not countenance high mortality among U.S. troops. Previously, throatcutting of Americans was a terror-tactic, designed to cause a mass exodus of Americans. Today, U.S. troops are viewed as currency for trading purposes, to secure the freedom of detained terrorists. This means that President Bush's edict that "the U.S. will not back down" has worked. Zarqawi admits here that his tactics have changed, once again under duress, due to U.S. resolve.

Zarqawi is correct to characterize the Shi'a as patiently waiting to implement a long-term plan to dominate Iraq, at the expense of Kurds and Sunni Muslims. His final paragraph is an ascending ruler's mandate, couched in the sycophantic language of an indentured servant.

Summary:

There are many outright historic distortions and evident inaccuracies in Zarqawi's letter. His displayed contempt for Shiite Muslims exceeds his sentiments for Americans, whom he believes to be two-dimensional and of momentary concern. i.e. Shiite Muslims are the long-term enemy, as they are held in contempt by all of al-Qaeda's leaders. Western analysts resolutely maintain this discord between Shiite and Sunni precludes strategic collaboration, but the Koran clearly instructs Muslim enemies to collaborate as allies, when they are attacked by the kafir infidels. i.e. Koranic precepts mandate, in principle, that Iran accommodate UBL and al-Qaeda's leaders, as a means for defeating western infidels and Christian/Jewish invaders.

Our goal is to break the hack of the insurgency. To achieve this goal, we must first comprehend who we are dealing with. It is a misnomer and counterproductive to view the insurgency as a unified force. The nature of Zarqawi's psychosis, coupled with his ongoing traumatic stress, both serve to create factional discord within his organization. And because Zarqawi's team is constantly forced into a reactionary mode, every milestone such as Saturday's popular vote for the Iraqi Constitution, are factors that exponentially increase many layers and levels of threats to the stability of Zarqawi's organization. from within, Zarqawi's battle is nearing it's end.

If Zawahiri's letter is a topographical map, then the density of question marks in one paragraph may be viewed as a mountain refuge. They represent an anomaly in the topography of Zawahiri's communication.

At this pivotal moment, the core issue is the relationship between Zawahiri and Zarqawi. From Zawahiri's perspective, he is attempting to contain and control a madman who is out of control. Zawahiri is under duress: his responsibilities to the Iranians mandate an unthinkable concession, that be stop the killing of Shiite Muslims. This is like telling a ferret to leave the chickens alone.

So many questions in one paragraph, represent indirect communication: Zawahiri is afraid. Zawahiri feels the ominous weight of responsibility, as he hammers his point home. Very likely, he expects the killing of Shi'a will continue, if not by Zarqawi, then by his followers. This deep fear reaches to the subconscious mind. Zawahiri is afraid that Zarqawi will ignore him, and he is afraid of what he will do. i.e. The consequences of Zarqawi's ongoing sectarian violence in Iraq, shall work to the detriment of Zawahiri in Iran.

In this critical paragraph, Zawahiri also confirms the Koran's mandate that Muslim enemies collaborate as friends, when attacked by kafir infidels. He states, "both we and the Iranians need to refrain from harming each other at this time in which the Americans are targeting us."

There is enough material, independently corroborated, to support our claim that UBL resides in Iran. And U.C.R. has developed a tactical strategy whereby he will be compelled to look for us, rather than the opposite. It is my hope that all of us together, shall have the opportunity to fully develop this project.

Yours Sincerely,/

Be Polite to the Host:

Zawahiri claims that when the U.S. departs Iraq, "un-Islamic forces" will attempt to fill the void. If you review both letters, Shiite Muslims are considered as the only potent long-term adversary, capable of dominating the Iraqi table. Zawahiri is making a polite reference to the Iranian Shi'a. But Zawahiri's words starkly contrast Zarqawi's vituperative tone against Iran's Shiite Muslims. Why is Zawahiri being so polite? Is his tone attributable to his status as a guest of the Iranians?

Zarqawi states lraq, "has not mountains in which we can take refuge and no forests in whose thickets we can hide." But Zawahiii and UBL have found a third venue for hiding: the sovereign state of Iran, whose borders appear to be impenetrable to the U.S.-led coalition.

Miscellaneous Points:

Zawahiri advises Zarqawi to integrate his organization among the Iraqi populace, to garner support. He tells Zarqawi to develop, "circles of support, assistance, and cooperation, and through them to advance until you become ... an organization." This is impossible, because Zarqawi's organization is already contracting, as described in the previous analysis of his letter. Does Zawahiri repeat this message twice, because he's aware Zarqawi cannot maintain his team?

Zawahiri emphasizes a need to support the ulema (religious leaders), even when they are wrong. In these statements, Zawahiii confirms the ulema's essential function, calibrating a spiritual compass for today's Muslims and terrorists at large. Saudi, Egyptian, and Pakistani ulema in particular are responsible for seeding terror around the world. Zawahiri continues by admitting the mujuhedeen are not capable of "undertaking the burden" of illuminating "educational curricula". In summary: like the Saudi mutawwa (religious police) the mujahedeen fighters are only capable of enforcement, while the mullahs are the directors of today's Islamo-fascist terror. /// We need to reform and reign in the Mullahs fist, so the body politic of Islam will follow.

Both documents taken from the internet, are slightly unusual in that they do not use word-wrap. If you copy both documents to your 'clipboard', then paste them into an MS Word document, then turn on visible formatting, you'll see that each line is manually ended in the right margin, with a manual carriage return. Perhaps both confiscated documents were translated into English and distributed from the same computer. These two documents can be seen at: http://www.globalsecurity.org/wmd/library/news/iraq/2004/02/040212-al-zarqawi.htm and http://www.dni.gov/letter in english.pdf

- Winter 2001/2002: the UAE Deputy Prime Minister Shaikh Sultan bin Zayed, a valuable U.C.R. resource, revealed that Iran banned hunting of Houbari by UAE falconers. Iran's state-sanctioned policy is established so that UBL can hunt without enemy interference and interdiction;
- February 06,2002: the Christian Science Monitor reports the UBL's cook claims that UBL fled to Iran. The cook describes UBL hunting "quail", while other "quail…were brought in by road from Iran". He is not talking about quail. He is talking about Houbara. (article enclosed, below)
- November, 2004: UBL sighting near Mashad, Iran by U.C.R. staff. The details were reported to Major General Paul Vallely on January 31,2005. The FBI interviewed U.C.R. on September 02; 2000
- November, 2004: UBL sighting south of the Caspian, by Ken Timmerman's source. This was an independent sighting, unknown to both U.C.R. and General Vallely, until Paul met Ken in NYC on Jnne 13, 2005. Timmerman met the FBI and also reported the sighting details in his book, Countdown To Crisis, The Comine Nuclear Showdown With Iran.

This letter is legitimate. Zawahiri orders Zarqawi to stop graphic films of slaughter, which alienate Muslim supporters. After this command was received, Zarqawi stopped throat-cuttings. Zawahiri then instructs Zarqawi to "kill the captives by bullet", which he does.

One Paragraph ....

4 The Rosetta stone to this letter is in the question marks. In this 13 page letter, there are a total of 27 question marks. Fifteen of those question marks (56%) are limited to one paragraph. These question marks represent a guarded change in emotion, in the context of a 'what if scenario. They represent as fact, an abrupt change in rhythm and tempo: Zawahii is afraid to give the answers, so he asks questions and compels the reader to provide the answers for bimeoutf.

This anomaly should not be overlooked by intelligence analysts. Imagine if this paragraph had 15 exclamation points, instead of 15 question marks! That paragraph would have stuck out lie a sore thumb. In an indirect, between-the-lines oriental society, question marks are just as confrontationalas exclamation points.

- 4 In this paragraph, Zawahiri is confronting Zarqawi about killing Shiite Muslims (Iranian tribals). The unique payload message of that one paragraph, is to stop killing al-Qaeda's sworn enemies. Nowhere else can you find Zawahiri or UBL counseling against the killing of Shi'a Only here.
- 4 Why? This paragraph shouts that Zawahiri is obliged to protect Shiite Muslims. This new policy is untenable to al-Oaeda's leadership ... unless al-Zawahiri is a guest, prisoner, or beneficiary of Iranian hospitality. This paragraph supports U.C.R.'s Iranian sighting of UBL last November.

The unique rature of Zawahiri calling for a 'cease-fin'against Shiite Muslims, is underscored when considered in relation to Zarqawi's letter that promises to annihilate the Shi'a Zawahiri's policy is (1) against al-Qaeda doctrine and is (2) nervously expressed in one unique paragraph.

4 Furthermore: prior to that paragraph, there are five paragraphs denoted by A, B, C, D, E. Other paragraphs in this letter, which are preceded by letters or numbers, signify a distinct change of topic. Bt these five paragraphs are unusual, in that they are all talkirg about the same subject. Here, the letters are not used to denote a change of topic –rather, they are used to emphasize the same point (i.e. the Sunni "collision" with Shiite apostates), like a fist banging on the table.

Somebody has convinced Zawahiri to protect the hated Shiite Muslims. Is it the Iranian Shi'a?

Relative Suffering of Relatives:

In the primary paragraph with 15 question marks, Zawahii mentions that "we have more than 100 prisoners...who are from the leadership...in the custody of the Iranians." Zawahiri fails to complain about their torture, and the destruction of al-Qaeda's agenda.

Relative to this, consider how Zawahii complains about his favorite wife, his son, his daughter, and thræ families suffering from war. Yet, there is no thought for the suffering of 100 prisoners. Is this because a)-Qaeda's 100 prisoners in Iran, are not suffering at all, because they are guests of Ahmedinijad?

On July 31,2002 I was a guest of the Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal at his Jeddah palace. The next day he flew to Iran, to receive two al-Qaeda terrorists held in Iranian custody, and to escort them to Saudi Arabia. i.e., It's no secret that Iranholds senior al-Qaeda terrorists.

Be Polite to the Host:

Zawahii claims that when the U.S. departs Iraq, "un-Islamic forces" will attempt to fill the void. If you review both letters, Shiite Muslims are considered as the only potent long-term adversary, capable of dominating the Iraqi table. Zawahiri is making a polite reference to the Iranian Shi'a. Bt Zawahiri's words starkly contrast Zarqawi's vituperative tone against Iran's Shiite Muslims. Why is Zawahiri being so polite? Is his tone attributable to his status as a guest of the Iranians?

Zarqawi states Iraq, "has not mountains in which we can take refuge and no forests in whose thickets we can hide." But Zawahiri and UBL have found a third venue for hiding; the sovereign state of Iran, whose borders appear to be impenetrable to the U.S.-led coalition.

Miscellaneous Points:

Zawahii advises Zarqawi to integrate his organization among the Iraqi populace, to gather support He tells Zarqawi to develop, "circles of support, assistance, and cooperation, and through them to advance until you become ..., an organization." This is impossible, because Zarqawi's organization is already contracting, as described in the previous analysis of his letter. Does Zawahiri repeat this message twice, because he's aware Zarqawi cannot maintain his team?

Zawahiri emphasizes a need to support the ulema (religious leders), even when they are wrong. In these statements, Zawahii confirms the ulema's essential function, calibrating a spiritual compass for today's Muslims and terrorists at large. Saudi Egyptian, and Pakistani ulema in particular are responsible for seeding terror around the world. Zawahiri continues by admitting the mujahedeen are not capable of "undertaking the burden" of illuminating "educational curricula". In summary: like the Saudi mutawwo (religious police) the mujahedeen fighters are only capable of enforcement, while the mullahs are the directors of today's Islamo-fascist terror. ///

- February 06, 2002: the Christian Science Monitor reports the UBL's cook claims that UBL fled to Iran. The cook describes UBL hunting "quail", while other "quail…were brought in by read from Iran". He is not talking about quail. He is talking about Houbara. (article enclosed, below)

If Zawahiri's letter is a topographical map, then the density of question marks in one paragraph may be viewed as a mountain refuge. They represent an anomaly in the topography of Zawahiri's communication.

At this pivotal moment, the core issue is the relationship between Zawahii and Zarqawi. From Zawahii's perspective, he is attempting to contain and control a madman who is at of control. Zawahii is under duress: his responsibilities to the Iranians mandate an unthinkable concession, that he stop the killing of Shiite Muslims. This is like telling a ferret to leave the chickens alone.

So many questions in one paragraph, represent indirect communication: Zawahiri is afraid. Zawahiri feels the ominous weight of responsibility, as he harmens his point home. Very likely, he expects the killing of Shi'a will continue, if not by Zarqawi, then by his followers. This deep fear reaches to the subconscious mind. Zawahiri is afraid that Zarqawi will ignore him, and he is afraid of what he will do. i.e. The consequences of Zarqawi's ongoing sectarian violence in Iraq, shall work to the detriment of Zawahiri in Iran.

In this critical paragraph, Zawahiri also confirms the Koran's mandate that Muslim enemies collaborate as friends, when attacked by kafir infidels. He states, "both we and the Iranians need to refrain from harming each other at this time in which the Americans are targeting vs."

There is enough material, independently corroborated, to support our claim that UBL resides m Iran. And U.C.R. has developed a tactical strategy whereby he will be compelled to look for us, rather than the opposite. It is my hope that all of us together, shall have the opportunity to fully develop this project

Alan Howell Parrot, for the Union for the Conservation of Paptors, Inc.

FOR: SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FROM: Ken Kroe, JSD (AT&L) OCT 24 2005

SUBJECT: Response to Snowflake on "Using Diesel Fuel in Gasoline Engines"

- You asked in your September 26,2005, snowflake(TAB A) whether M₁. James Baurenschmidt's proposal (TAB B) to mandate the use of Sonex technology on all newly acquired internal combustion engines has merit. Sonex technology permits gasoline engines to burn diesel and kerosene-based fuels.
- With the exception of unmanned aerial vehicles, all DoD's major end items and tactical equipment already use diesel and/or kerosene-based fuels. This is largely a result of DoD's logistics policy requiring a "single fuel on the battlefield." The single fuel policy simplifies logistics by minimizing the need to maintain separate storage facilities and tactical pipelines on the battlefield.
- DoD's administrative vehicle fleet (staff cars and light trucks) is leased through the General Services Administration (GSA). GSA adheres to legislative mandates (Energy Policy Act of 1992 and Executive Order 13149) which require that 75% of all non-tactical vehicles use alternative fuels such as propane, methane, natural gas, or electric/gasoline hybrids.
- Since DoD already uses diesel and kerosene-based fuels in the engines of our equipment, there is little application for Sonex technology

Dear Mr. Rumsfeld,

Is there any chance you can direct the military to require all future equipment with an internal combustion engine to be made using the Sonex technology (see enclosed article)?

Sonex can help the military reach the goal of switching to a uniform fuel like JP5 within a few years. Furthermore, Sonex also makes much higher fuel efficiency and environmental standards achievable.

Mr. Rumsfeld, your issuing such a directive would serve our nation well.

Sincerely, James Bauer no chinist

PS. You are more than welcome to visit the Sonex laboratory located in Annapolis. Maryland.

Can a gas engine use diesel fuel with less pollution?

by James Bauemschmidt

Anyone concerned with rising oil prices and pollution from fossil fuel might like to know about a new technology, which addresses both problems, its application will put an end to the days of scotty smoke seen from accelerating diesel invokes and buses. The technology involves a slight modification to an engine part that can be mass-produced on existing manufacturing lines.

The technology is the result of over thirty years R&D conducted by Or. Andrew Pouring, a former professor and chairman of the DepL of Aerospace Engineering at the US Naval Academy. Through his company Sonex Research, Inc. In Annapolis. MD (are www.sonexresearch.com), his work focused on improving the process of combustion through a combination of chemical and fluid dynamic effects. The technology is manifested in the new design of piston heads inside the engine. The Sonex pistons have uniquely shaped chemicers with holes in them which bring about a more complete combustion through the turbulence created by high speed air flows emitted from the chambers. (See diagram below).

rn e new piston can be used in one of two way6 in a direct-injected (DI) engine.

A standard Di diesel engine at compression ratios greater than 161 can be equipped with the Sonex piston, enabling overall soot reduction of approximately 50% and a reduction InNOx of 10% without exhaustgas recirculation. This application has little affect-on fuel economy. These results were positively evaluated by the world-famous laboratory. Ricardo Consulting Engineers in England. But the most advantages come when applying the Sonex piston in a Digasoline engine with compression at 12.5:1 or lower, while using a variety of fuels, This design is called Sonex controlled At/to ignition (SCAI). The SCAI process is basically controlled HCCI (Honogeneous Charge Compression Ignition), which manufacturers world wide are seeking to control because of its low emissione and good fuel comony. The beauty of the SCAI process is that it enables a gas engine to run with no spark plugs using either a heavier fuel such as diated or military fuel JPS or lighter electrol fuels with groeter efficiency and cleaner exheust. Using JPS in a single cylinder engine, the Sonex isbonitory measured an overall acot reduction of approximately 90% and NOx reduction of approximately 80%. The need for elaborate aftertreatment of the scheum is minimized. The result is a nuch lighter and more fuelefficient engine which can run on heavier or lighter fuels, including gasoline. Sonex has recently successfully applied their SCAI process to a siz-cylinder Suboru gas engine using JP5 fuel under a DARPA (Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency) contract and is confirming its single cylinder results.

Diesel fuel offers several advantages over gasoline. Diesel is easier to make at our overworked refinences. MTBE contamination from gas tanks is not an issue. Diesel fuel is also not explosive (it will excingutable a burning match), so transporting it to gas stations would not attract temportiat activity. For several years, the US military has been trying to ewitch to using only a uniform karoane based fuel (JPS) similar to diesel. Problems of attacks on convoys transporting gasoline have already controlled our forcias in iraq and reaffirmed the need for improvement. Also, because diseel is a beavier fuel, it contains more energy. The US Marine Corps has already spolled another version of Sonex technology in their UAVs (unmanned aviation vehicles) with success. The same UAVs are now able to fity 20%, farther using heavy fuel thanks to the Sonex technology.

SUBJECT Part I of DBB's Task Group on Military Postal Service Final Report

- Attached for your preview are the initial findings and recommendations debated and approved by the DBB on July 28,2005. The Task Group will present its recommendations on models for privatization and change management strategies during the December 1st Board meeting.
- The main observations on the current Military Postal System were:
  - Mail delivery not a core military function opportunity to move military personnel from postal to other functions
  - DoD continues to struggle to achieve timely delivery of mail
  - Mail delivery is not treated as part of the DoD supply chain (not a part of BMMP)
- Recommendations:
  - The DBB concurred with Task Group recommendations to improve the current system by mandating jointness immediately; treating mail as part of DoD supply chain; incorporating mail processing/distribution in contingency planning; and renegotiating USPS-MPSA agreement to support a tabula rasa approach.
  - Rather than focusing on improvements to the current system, the DBB strongly recommended that the Department outsource the collection, processing and distribution of military mail to the maximum extent possible.

> Why consider outsourcing military mail?

- 1. Delivery of mail is not a core military function
  - Only among Navy enlisted personnel is "postal" a primary Military Occupation Specialty (MOS) – for all other Services, and among Navy Officers, "postal" is a sub-skill set
- 2. Opportunity to move military personnel from postal to other functions
  - 9 For example 2,232 active duty personnel are qualified as postal clerks, of which 277 are aboard Navy ships
  - 9 Task is time intensive and utilizes military and civilian assets who could be better utilized in primary military and civilian occupational skill set
- 3. GAO sites inadequacies with current system for training military mail personnel
- 4. DoD continues to struggle to achieve the timely delivery of mail
  - Per MPSA, current transit times average 3 to 7 days in most areas with OIF/OEF averaging 11 to 13 days
  - 9 GAO's audit closer to the time of the ground war found much longer transit times
- 5. GAO suggests that true costs of military mail delivery cannot be calculated

- Outsource collection, processing and distribution of mail to the maximum extent possible
  - 9 Mail delivery is a non-core business

- 9 Minimize use of uniformed personnel touching mail ("tail-to-tooth" rationale)
- 9 Far greater contractor involvement and automation should be focused on labor intensive functions such as mail sorting, loading and unloading trucks, transporting mail, and providing redirect and locator services
- 9 Should MPSA go beyond the seven functions they currently consider eligible to be outsourced? {Processing & distribution; Directory & redirect; Local ground transport; Supply Clerks; Build aircraft pallets; Unloading and processing mail containers; Retail clerks (with proper bonding)}

TABULA RASA APPROACH: PROS

- The work performed in the delivery and processing of military mail. up to the point of handoff to the brigade commander in the field can be performed by private companies
  - 9 Below the brigade level (sometimes referred to as the "last mile" since troops are mobile) the military commander in the field -- at the lowest level possible -- takes final responsibility
  - 9 Mail delivery in "last mile" is not an issue in an overseas area where there are no contingencies
- 9 Our research suggests that private companies are willing to and capable of assuming all functions of non-contingency area delivery of military mail and already have assumed this role in contingency areas, up to the point of hand off to the military commander
  - 9 Currently only at corps level
- Our research suggests that private companies could establish "purple" postal stations in contingency areas; or alternatively, provide persons to perform labor-intensive, low-skill work to free up military (down through brigade level)
- 9 Our research suggests that there is cutting edge technology currently available to resolve problems and guide DoD policy with respect to military addresses
  - 9 Address "hygiene" and standardization must be resolved now not in three years

July 2005

TABULA RASA APPROACH: PROS

- Innovative private company solutions may offer rapid technological advances in electronic processing DoD as a "test case"
- Mail handled by the military inevitably faces conflicts over scarce transport, e.g., mail for morale or ammunition for battle
  - Private handling of military mail mitigates this dilemma
  - > Mail is increasingly electronic, which reduces the volume for letter mail
- Current congressional interest in changes in domestic mail offers timely opportunity for significant modernization of military mail
- DoD outsourcing of other battlefield functions has been successful (e.g., food service, laundry, etc.)
- DBB seeks "overarching," systemic recommendations
- > Our goal should be a 'transformational' solution

July 2005

TABULA RASA APPROACH: CONS

- Implementation of outsourcing could be complex
- 9 Danger of civilian casualties in contingency areas
- 9 The usual concerns and questions regarding the legal status of civilian contract personnel in contingency areas
- 9 Potential hindrances from Status of Forces Agreements

- 9 Standardize and coordinate mail collection, processing and distribution in theater
- 9 Define "purple" protocol for military addresses (compatible w/ USPS)
- 9 Use unique identifier codes, e.g. bar codes, for in-transit visibility
- 9 Establish "purple" post offices in theater beyond the first point of entry

The 'Torture Narrative' Unravels

By Robert L. Pollock, Staff Reporter Of The Vall Street Journal

It's hardly a secret that Private First Class Lynndie England was sentenced this past week for her role as "leash girl" in the infancus abuses photographed at Irag's Abu Ghraib prison in late 2003. But it was also noticeable that the denouement of this spectacular story was relegated to the innards of newspapers that had once given it weeks of front-page treatment. "hat's almost surely because the trial of the last of the Maryland Army Reservists to face justice – like those of the others that came before her – offered no evidence to support claims that the abuses were caused by a Bush administration that had "created the climate" or "set the tone" for "torture."

That was, of course, the widespread and explosive charge last (election) year. Almost immediately the leaked photos of Private England and her compatriots generated calls for Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's resignation. So-called "torture memos" were unearthed, in which administration lawyers had discussed the range of permissible interrogation techniques – for al Qaeda suspects in the wake of 9/11. And by one of the greatest leaps of logic ever seriously entertained in our national discourse, those memos were said to have caused the behavior of soldiers in Iraq who knew nothing beyond the limits outlined in the Army Field Manual. Ted Kennedy, for one, offened up a useful reminder of why Americans have never wanted him to be president by declaring that "Saddam's torture chambers reopened under new management, U.S. management."

The writer Heather Mac Donald dubbed this the "torture narrative." And it persists today despite the conclusion a year ago of the Independent Panel to Review DOD Detention Operations that the abuses "were not part of authorized interrogations nor were they even directed at intelligence targets" (emphasis added). Or in the words of the panel's chairman, former Defense Secretary James Schlesinger -- whose bipartisan cabinet career included a stint in the Carter administration - what those pictures showed was sick behavior by the "night shift."

But don't just take his word for it. "You feel that by doing these things you were setting conditions for interrogations," a judge asked Private England in a hearing earlier this year. "No, sit," she responded. "So this was just a way to embarrassthem?" he continued. "Yes, sit," was her reply.

Or consider the testimony of Specialist Jeremy C. Sivits: "Our command would have slammed us. They believe in doing the right thing. If they saw what was going on, there would be hell to pay."

In all, seven guards and two military-intelligencepersonnel have now faced justice for the Abu Ghraib abuses, with even those pleading guilty undergoing detailed sentencing hearings. No evidence has emerged to support the theory that abuses had anything to do with interrogation.

It's worth remembering too that these prosecutions were based on investigations conducted with dispatch that did the Army nothing but credit: A criminal probe was begun within a day of the abuse reports traveling up the chain of command on January 13,2004; two days after that, Central Command issued a press release about the investigation; on March 20 it was announced that charges had-been brought against six of those involved. Meanwhile, Major General Antonio Taguba had completed an investigation whose conclusions have now stood the test of nine courts martial. And this all more than a month before the photos were leaked to the press.

I.

Have detainee abuses occurred elsewhere in the war on terror? Ofcourse. But they were "widespread" only if you define that term geographically instead of by frequency. The adjective "systematic' has been similarly misused. Overall, more than 70,000 detainees have passed through U.S. military custody since late 2001. About 500 criminal investigations have been conducted into allegations of related misconduct, many of which were found to be unsubstantiated. But more than 200 people have already been disciplined for actions ranging from failure to report to prisoner abuse itself.

There have also now been 12 major inquiries -- including investigations led by Major General George Fay and Vice Admiral Albert Church-- into detainee treatment in Irac Afghanistan and Guantanamo Bay. More than 2,800 interviews have been conducted and 16,000 pages of documents produced. And there have been 31 Congressional hearings and 45 staff briefings. Given that track record, we can be quite sure that the latest abuse allegations to surface (from an officer of the 82nd Airborne) will get the thorough hearing they deserve.

In short, all the evidence suggests a low rate of detainee mistreatment, one that compares favorably with U.S. civilian prisons, never mind that of other and earlier militaries. "The behavior of our troops is so much better than it was in World War II," Mr. Schlesingertold me last year. I called him this week to ask what we've learned since. "That the press exaggerated," he replied. The suggestion that Mr. Schlesinger and countless others -- from decorated officers to military juries Thave lent their good names to some kind of whitewash only reveals the remaining accusers for the crackpots they are.

Let me add some final words on bow the Abu Ghraib scandal has affected America's image in Iraq. It hasn't been helpful, of course. But -- having traveled there three times in the past two and a half years, most recently in August = I can attest that the dominant image of the American soldier in the minds of most Iraqis is that of liberator, as depicted in the sculpture shown here by a craftsman from Saddam's hometown of Tikrit. Americans can be proud of the way their young men and women have performed in Iraq and elsewhere in the war on terror. And they can be proud of the way the military has meted out justice for those few abuses that have occurred.

That was, of course, the widespread and explosive charge last (election) year. Almost immediately the leaked photos of Private England and her compatriots generated calls for Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's resignation. So-called "torture memos" were unearthed, in which administration Lawyers had discussed the range of permissible interrogationtechniques -- for al Qaeda suspects in the wake of 9/11. And by one of the greatest leaps of logic ever seriously entertained in our national discourse, those memos were said to have caused the behavior of soldiers in Iraq who knew nothing beyond the limits outlined in the Army Field Manual. Ted Kennedy, for one, offered up a useful reminder of why Americans have never wanted him to be president by declaring that "Saddam's torture chambers reopened under new management, U.S. management."

The writer Heather Mac Donald dubbed this the "torture narrative." And it persists today despite the conclusion a year ago of the Independent Panel to Review DOD Detention Operations that the abuses "were not part of authorized interrogations nor were they even directed at intelligence targets" (emphasis added). Or in the words of the panel's chairman, former Defense Secretary James Schlesinger — whose bipartisan cabinet career included a stint in the Carter administration--- what those pictures showed was sick behavior by the "night shift."

But don't just take his word for it. "You feel that by doing these things you were setting conditions for interrogations," a judge asked Private England in a hearing earlier this year. "No. sir," she responded. "So this was just a way to embarrass them?" he continued. "Yes. sir," was her reply.

Or consider the testimony of Specialist Jeremy C. Sivits: "Our command would have slammed us. They believe in doing the right thing. If they saw what was going on, there would be hell to pay."

In all, seven guards and two military-intelligence personnel have now faced justice for the Abu Ghraib abuses, with even those pleading grilty undergoing detailed sentencing hearings. No evidence has emerged to support the theory that abuses had anything to do with interrogation.

It's worth remembering too that these prosecutions were based on investigations conducted with dispatch that did the Army nothing but credit: A criminal probe was begun within a day of the abuse reports traveling up the chain of command on January 13,2004: two days after that, Central Command issued a press release about the investigation; on March 20 it was announced that charges had been brought against six of those involved. Meanwhile, Major General Antonio Taguba had completed an investigation whose conclusions have now stood the test of nine courts martial. And this all more than a month before the photos were leaked to the press.

Have detainee abuses occurred elsewhere in the war on terror? Of course. But they were "widespread" only if you define that term geographically instead of by frequency. The adjective "systematic" has been similarly misused. Overall, more than 70,000 detainees have passed through U.S. military custody since late 2001. About 500 criminal investigations have heen conducted into allegations of related misconduct, many of which were found to be unsubstantiated. But more than 200 people have already heen disciplined for actions ranging from failure to report to prisoner abuse itself.

There have also now been 12major inquiries -- including investigations led by Major General George Fay and Vice Admiral Albert Church -- into detainee treatment in Iraq, Afghanistan and Guantanamo Bay. More than 2,800 interviews have been conducted and 16,000 pages of documents produced. And there have been 31 Congressional hearings and 45 staff briefings. Given that track record, we can be quite sure that the latest abuse allegations to surface (from an officer of the 82nd Airborne) will get the thorough hearing they deserve.

In short, all the evidence suggests a low rate of detainee mistreatment, one that compares favorably with U.S. civilian prisons, never mind that of other and earlier militaries. "The behavior of cur troops is so much better than it was in World War II," Mr. Schlesingertold me last year. I called him this week to ask what we've learned since. "That the press exaggerated,"he replied. The suggestion that Mr. Schlesinger and countless others — from decorated officers to military juries — have lent their good names to some kind of whitewash only reveals the remaining accusers for the crackpots they are.

Let me add some final words on how the Abu Ghraib scandal has affected America's image in Iraq. It hasn't been helpful, of course. But -- having traveled there three times in the past two and a half years, most recently in August -- I can attest that the dominant image of the American soldier in the minds of most Iraqis is that of liberator, as depicted in the sculpture shown here by a craftsman from Saddam's hometown of Tikrit. Americans can be proud of the way their young men and women have performed in Iraq and elsewhere in the war on terror. And they can be proud of the way the military has meted out justice for those few abuses that have occurred

SUBJECT: Congressional Amendment on Uzbekistan

If I correctly understand the situation, 1 think we ought to oppose the amendment on Uzbekistan. It seems to me we won't have credibility in any other nation in the region or the world if we don't pay our bills.

Please get the precise information on what they are billing us for and why we are proposing to pay it, so I can make sure I'm correct.

Thanks.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

FROM: Robert Rangel

RE: Rep. Illeana Ros-Lehtinen matter

- Responding to your October 14 memo (attached)
- Rep. Ros-Lehtinen is interested in securing assistance for her husband (Dexter Lehtinen) to travel to Iraq as a credentialed reporter.
- Her husband is politically active in South Florida Republican circles and is a columnist for various newspapers.
- It appears that the husband is seeking mostly information on the logistics of arranging travel within theater as a reporter.
- I have contacted her Chief of Staff to let them know we are working on the request.
- I have also asked Allison Barber to follow up with Rep. Ros-Lehtinen's office to better determine what assistance can be provided.
- For your consideration, attached is a draft note to Rep. Ros-Lehtinen as follow up to your visit with her in Miami.

It has been a while since we last talked and well so since the Secretary has had wars to fight. But there is now something you might pass on to my former mentor that he should have an interest in.

About a year ago I was approached by a group at Mass General who had been working for the State Department in a program to prevent the proliferation of former bioweapons scientists from the old Soviet Union days. Apparently State has spent hundreds of millions of dollars and fourteen years in this effort and was just treading water. They came after me to see if I could help put something together that could achieve the overall objective and make 't self-sustaining. Though this is the type of rabbit T have pulled out of hats before, I think that State was stunned to find that in about six months and at modest expense I had brought the the effort just about to the finish line. So surprised were they in fact that they rethought the whole thing and have suddenly pulled back my funding which was already in place.

We were already there. Seems that most of government spends vast amounts of money to create activity rather than achieve objectives. In this case it is disgraceful. I would like to talk to him about the program and the way it has been handled. It is still salvageable.

My colleagues at Mass General, on the other hand, have been outstanding. And they have uncovered, by the way, some science in Russia which they have been scouring that they believe could have a huge impact in averting the catastrophe to the general population and our military forces from the impending avian flu epidemic. Someone at high levels of government should be talking to our guys about it. Just as long as it not the State Department. And for a further by the way, it was our small group that forced the Russiane to go to central Siberia to look for evidence of avian flu and found it there, highlighting the threat to Europe. Our American contribution, of course, never made it to the Russian press.

(b)(6). I do not know if you can still get through to the boss, but if you can, this one is important for mankind, which is, right y or wrongly, beginning to regard government as high comedy.

FROM: Peter Flory, Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy ASE has seen

SUBJECT: Non-Proliferation Work in the Former Soviet Union (Ref: ES-4402) (U)

On October 11,2005 you asked us to consider Jan Buck's proposals for keeping former Soviet bioweapons scientists from proliferating their expertise and his request for State Department assistant with the proposals (Tab A).

- The essence of Buck's proposal is to launch a project that would employ some former bioweapons scientists.
- We contacted Buck and State Department officials with whom he worked.
- When we first spoke with Buck, he complained that State reneged on its commitment to fund the start-up costs of this project. State's action is what prompted Buck to contact you. Based on our request, State reengaged.
- Buck recently told us that he has found private financing for all aspects of his effort (including the part which State was to have paid).
- Buck says USG assistance is no longer required.

• This responds to the first item on your October 17 language snowflake. (TABA).

OED :

- We have worked with the Departments of State, Education, Labor and the Director of National Intelligence to develop a National Language Initiative. Secretary Rice is interested in announcing this initiative by the end of the month.
- Our existing National Security Education Program (NSEP) would kick off this initiative in fiscal year 2006.
  - 1. NSEP establishes programs in the languages of interest to DoD and produces civilian university graduates with high levels of proficiency. We would add five new programs (Farsi, Hindi, and central Asian languages), enhance our current programs in Arabic and Chinese, and expand our immersion programs in Egypt. Syria, and China. This would produce 2000 graduates with high levels of proficiency in Arabic, Chinese, Persian, Hirch and central Asian languages by Fiscal Year 2009. Many will have national security service obligations.
  - 2. Recognizing that language facility is best built early, in September the NSEP awarded an experiment to the University of Oregon and the Portland, Oregon school system for the development of a "pipeline" teaching Chinese beginning in kindergarten and advancing through to college. NSEP would add two new FY06 pilot pipelines (in Arabic, Farsi or Hindi). (The Department of Education would expand pipelines to 100communities in FY07 and beyond.)
- The added FY06 cost to DoD for the National Language Initiative would be $9M. Outyear costs for DoD would be $20M per year, including an on-call civilian reserve corps.
- Our "modest" investment will prompt major changes in the Department of Education (with an investment of up to $134M in Fiscal Year 2007) and Department of State (with an investment of up to $27M in Fiscal Year 2007).

Thank you for the discussion we had earlier taday on our efforts to move forward on appropriate target languages. I'll look forward to receiving two new memos from you in the immediate future:

- First, you will redo the July 1 memo on National Foreign Language Initiative to assure me that we'll be spending our money on the right languages for this 21st century.
- Second, provide me a broad discussion of how we are spending money in the Department, with similar assurances that we are focusing on the right set of target languages, e.g., Arabic, Chinese, Faral, Hindi and so forth. Show me where we were in 2001 and your proposed targets for the next three years. I would also like to see the numbers from the heritage community and specific targets in the fature. You can show the costs, including what we'll stop doing, as well as what we'll start doing. As a general matter, I question a continuing focus on French, German, Korean and Ruasian.

This is an important effort - let's stay on it and get it right for the country.

GENERAL COUNSEL

October 25, 2005, 3:00 PM

FOR SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

FROM: William J. Haynes II, General Counsel W1447 7 2005

SUBJECT: Lawsuits in Spain

- Regarding recently issued Spanish arrest warrants for three U.S. service members, you noted, "[w]e're going to have to figure out what we do about it and how it might affect the stationing of our forces there." (Tab A)
- We are working with DOJ and State on the way ahead with respect to the warrants.
  - o DOJ's Office of International Affairs, Criminal Division ("OIA") obtained copies of the warrants through informal channels and is having them translated.
  - o Significantly, the Spanish National Court prosecutor's office objects to the warrants and filed an appeal opposing them on the basis of lack of jurisdiction.
    - OIA is tracking the progress of the appeal and anticipates receiving an update on the status later this week.
- DOJ, in coordination with DoD and State, is preparing a response to the Spanish judge's Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty (MLAT) requests seeking information about the April 2003 incident and the testimony of the three soldiers involved in the attack.
  - As noted in my Info Memo (Tab B) to you last week, DOJ, DoD and State staffs agreed in recent discussions that combat-related activities are outside the scope of an MLAT.
- Regarding the stationing of our forces in Spain:
  - o DOJ's sense is that this is an isolated incident precipitated by a particular judge seeking to hasten the process of obtaining information related to his case.
  - o Thus, I do not see a need for immediate action regarding the stationing of forces. In any case, we need to continue to monitor the situation closely and consider further action when we know more.

INFO MEMO

October 19,2005, 5:30 p.m.

FOR SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

FROM: William J. Haynes 11, General Counsel

SUBJECT: Press Reports on Spanish Arrest Warrants

- According to October 19 press reports, a Spanish court has issued arrest warrants for three U.S. service members involved in combat operations in Iraq on April 8,2003, during which a Spanishjournalist was killed.
  - Reporting suggests the warrants would be disseminated through INTERPOL. Regardless, the warrants may be effective throughout Europe.
- The Spanishjudge previously sent two separate Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty (MLAT) requests to DOJ seeking information about the incident and the testimony of the three soldiers involved in the attack.
- The MLAT requests were the subject of interagency discussion most recently at the end of September 2005.
  - MLAT requests are foreign government requests for evidence in ongoing criminal proceedings or investigations.
  - o DOJ, DoD, and State agreed that combat-related activities are outside the scope of an MLAT. DoD has objected to providing any information under the MLAT in a combat-related case such as this one.
- USCENTCOM fully investigated the incident in 2003 and determined that the U.S. service members acted appropriately. USCENTCOM issued a News Release on the matter on August 12,2003 (Tab A).
- The USG has cooperated with the Spanish Government, including by providing information concerning the incident and resulting investigation through diplomatic channels.
- Once we receive the arrest warrants from Spain, we will coordinate with DOJ and State on how best to proceed.
- Army has ascertained that the 3U.S, service members are not in Europe.

The action was filly in accordance with the Rules of Engagement. .

The following summary provides background and details of the event.

By 7 April, Coalition forces had begun to encircle Baghdad and had initiated thrusts into the city. On 8 April, Coalition forces were pushing into Baghdad and being met with fierce enemy resistance. The enemy was operating throughout the civilian areas of the city, firing a spectrum of weapons at Coalition forces from the roofs and windows of surroundingbuildings. The enemy was fighting without any regard to civilians or civilian structures. Coalition forces continued to fight their way toward the Tigris River, just across from the Palestine Hotel, an area of significant enemy contact.

The eighth of April was a day of very intense fighting for A Company, 4-64 Armor. Their immediate mission was to secure an intersection and deny the enemy the use of the Jamurohora Bridge. On A Company's first attempt to secure the intersection they were met with heavy enemy direct and indirect fire from Rocket Propelled Grenades (RPGs), mortars and small arms originating from prepared defensive positions (bunkers) and from within and atop surrounding buildings. As they approached the intersection, they suffered two Wounded in Action (WLA). The intersection was defended by almost a battalion of Iraqi Republican Guards. Fire was so intense that A Company pulled back and requested Close Air Support (CAS) and additional fire support. An A-IO aircraft dropped a Joint Direct Attack Munition (JDAM) and strafed the enemy. A Company reattacked. The enemy continued to resist with much of their fire coming from the opposite bank of the Tigris River.

Spot reports were continually artiving at A Company concerning increasing enemy movements and activities along the opposite side of the Tigris River. Additional reports disclosed the discovery of potent Arti-Tark missiles. At this point, A Company had been in heavy fighting for several hours. The Company Commander was then advised by his Task Force Headquarters that an enemy radio had been recovered and that enemy transmissions were being monitored. Those transmissions indicated that A Company was being observed by an enemy spotter who was located across the Tigris River and was directing enemy forces and fires in their direction. While still under heavy norter, RPG, and missile fire, the A Company Commander directed his people to scan the surrounding buildings to try to find the enemy observer. A Company personnel observed what they believed to be a enemy hunter/killer team on the balcony of a room on the upper floors of a large tan colored building. They also witnessed flashes of light, consistent with enemy fire, coming from the same general location as the building.

One 120mm tank round was fired at the suspected enemy observer position. Immediately following that, monitored transmissions indicated that the enemy observer was taking fire and coordinated enemy firedirected at A Company ceased. It was only some time after the incident that A Company became aware of the fact that the building they fired on was the Palestine Hotel and that journalists at the hotel had been killed or injured as a result. However, intelligence reports also indicated that the enemy used portions of the hotel as a base of operations and that heavy enemy activity was occurring m those areas in and immediately around the hotel.

Conclusions: A Company was under heavy enemy attack. The company had positive intelligence that they were under direct observation frem an enemy hunter/killer team. The activities on the halcony of the Palestine Hotel were consistent with that of an enemy comhatant. They tired a single round in self-defense in full accordance with the Rules of Engagement. The enemy had repeatedly chosen to conduct its combat activities from throughout the civilian areas of Baghdad.

These actions included utilizing the Palestine Hotel and the areas immediately around it as a platform for military operations. Baghdad was a high intensity combat area and some journalists had elected to remain there despite repeated warnings of the extreme danger of doing so. The journalists' death at the Palestine Hotel was a tragedy and the United States has the deepest sympathies for the families of those who were killed.

FOR SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

FROM: Daniel J. Dell'Orto, Principal Deputy General Counsel XJ Y.

SUBJECT: President's Inherent Authority for Domestic Use of the Armed Forces

- Inherent Authority. In addition to express statutory authorities, the President has "inherent authority" under the Constitution to use the military domestically. This authority stems from the President's constitutional roles as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive, the unenumerated executive powers that the Constitution vests in the President to eusure the security of the uation, his constitutional responsibility to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed," and the natural right of the sovereign to protect itself. E.g.:
  - President Lincoln initiated significant military action against the Confederacy at the start of the Civil Werr, prior to congressional authorization.
  - Under his inherent authority, President Nixon approved the deployment of Federal forces to protect installations in the National Capital Region during protests against the Vietnam War.
  - The President's inherent authority may be invoked to authorize DoD responses to terrorist actions that, if treated as traditional crimes, would ordinarily fall under the responsibility of law enforcement agencies. Inherent authority may be used ouly in extraordinary circumstances where normal measures are insufficient to carry out federal functions. It inay not be exercised solely to perform routine and normal police functions (such as those types of front line law enforcement actions prohibited by the Posse Comitatus Act).

SUBJECT Posse Comitatus Act

- The phrase "posse comitatus" is literally translated from Latin as the "power of the county" and in common law referred to all those over the age of 15 upon whom the sheriff could call to help him perform his duties.
- The Posse Comitatus Act (PCA), 18 U.S.C. 1385, provides: "Whoever, except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress, willfully uses any part of the Army or the Air Force as a posse comitatus or otherwise to execute the laws shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."
- The PCA was originally enacted in 1878 due to congressional concerns about the use of Federal troops in the former-Confederate states to preserve law and order and to protect citizens' exercise of their Constitutional rights.
- Except for the addition of the Air Force, the language of the current statute is almost ideutical to the original 1878 law. As a matter of policy - but not law - DoD Directive 5525.5 makes the provisions of the PCA applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps.
- Absent Constitutional or statutory exceptions to the PCA, the Act has been interpreted to forbid active duty Army and Air Force personnel from directly participating in law enforcement activities such as arrests, searches, and seizures. The PCA does not restrict law enforcement activities by National Guard Personnel in a Title 32 (Federally funded – state control) or state active duty status.
- Statutory exceptions to the PCA include the Insurrection Statutes upon request from the Governor; statutes that pertain to emergency situations involving chemical, biological, and nuclear material; and Public Law 107-40, enacted after the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, which has heen construed to authorize the President to use the armed forces for certain domestic operations if necessary and appropriate.

- Other provisions of law permit limited DoD assistance, generally in the form of equipment and information, to law enforcement agencies hut do not permit direct participation by armed forces personnel in such law enforcement activities as arrests, searches, and scizures. These provisions include Military Support for Civilian Law Enforcement Agencies and Additional Support for Counter-drug Activities.
- The President has inherent authority under the Constitution to use the armed forces domestically in his role as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive notwithstanding any apparent PCA limitations.
- Unless a statutory exception to the PCA is invoked or the President acts using his inherent constitutional authority, DoD Army and Air Force personnel providing hurricane relief support cannot participate in civilian law enforcement activities in the areas in which they are providing relief.

INFO MEMO

October 19,2001, [1:00 AM

FROM: William J. Haynes II, General Counsel

SUBJECT: The Application of Military Power Domestically

- The Constitution charges the President with several roles. He is the Commanderin-Chief of the national military establishment and of the States' militia (when federalized). He is the Chief Executive, responsible for the non-military functions of the executive branch. And he is the chief diplomat, conducting the foreign affairs of the United States, including forming military alliances.
- DoD assists the President in fulfilling these responsibilities principally through: (1) traditional military operations, usually overseas; (2) support to other Federal agencies; and (3) direct employment of the military domestically.
- Traditional Military Operations. DoD's primary and traditional mission is the military defense of the United States from foreign enemies. DoD performs this mission under the direction of the President as Commander-in-Chief. The military chain of command runs from the President to the Secretary of Defense, and then either to the Military Departments or the Combatant Commands.
  - The traditional DoD mission encompasses operations such as defeating the Nazis in World War II and Iraqi forces during Operation DESERT STORM.
  - Public Law No. 107-40 authorizes the President to use "all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons" he determines were responsible for the September 11 attacks. Among other things, the joint resolution permits the President to employ DoD to perform traditional military operations against terrorists and their allies overseas.
- Support to CivilAuthorities. DoD also supports the President in the execution of his civil and foreign affairs responsibilities under the direction of other Federal agencies. E.g.:
  - DoD provides support to the FBI for crisis management of on-going domestic terrorist incidents. DoD also supports FEMA, which is the lead Federal agency with responsibility for managing the consequences of such incidents.

- DoD assists the FAA in responding to aircraft hijackings, including by providing interception and surveillance of hijacked airplanes.
- In the event of natural and manmade disasters, DoD provides FEMA and the lead Federal agency responsible for each Emergency Support Function (e.g., transportation, communications, mass care, hazardous materials) with a range of resources. In such situations, DoD support is coordinated by the Secretary of the Army through the Directorate of Military Support ("DOMS").
- DoD may loan equipment, provide training, and supply information acquired during traditional military operations to law enforcement agencies.
- DoD provides security for United States embassies abroad.
- Posse Comitatus A d DoD support to civil authorities is limited in some situations by the Posse Comitatus Act, which prohibits the use of the military "to execute the laws." Unless there are constitutional or statutory exceptions (discussed below), the Posse Comitatus Act has been interpreted to forbid the military from directly participating in "front line" law enforcement activities such as arrest, search, seizure, surveillance, pursuit, or as informants, undercover agents, or investigators.
- Domestic Use & Military Power. The President may use the military domestically to repel invasions, to suppress insurrections and conspiracies, to carry out federal functions, and to address serious law enforcement emergencies, including responding to domestic terrorist incidents that are beyond the capacity of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies to manage. DoD may conduct operations for these purposes directly, without going through other Federal agencies and without the restrictions of the Posse Comitatus Act.
  - Under Public Law No. 107-40, the President may use DoD for domestic military operations and law enforcement if "necessary and appropriate" against those he determines planned, authorized, committed or aided the September 11,2001 terrorist attacks.
  - The President has affirmative and broad statutory authority to use the military domestically when the Legislature or Governor of a state requests assistance through the Attorney General, the courts are not functioning, or civil disturbances obstruct the execution of the laws. E.g.:
    - Upon the request of the Governor of California, President Bush authorized U.S. Army units to assist in controlling the 1992 Los Angeles riots.

- In the 1950s and 1960s, Presidents used this authority in deploying Federal troops to enforcejudicial desegregation orders, to quell rioting at the University of Mississippi, and to protect civil rights marchers.
- Inherent Authority. In addition to express statutory authorities, the President has "inherent authority" under the Constitution to use the military domestically. This authority stems from the President's constitutional roles as Commander-in-Chief and Chief Executive, the unenumerated executive powers that the Constitution vests in the President to ensure the security of the nation, his constitutional responsibility to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed," and the natural right of the sovereign to protect itself. E.g.:
  - President Lincoln initiated significant military action against the Confederacy at the start of the Civil War, prior to congressional authorization.
  - Under his inherent authority, President Nixon approved the deployment of Federal troops to protect installations in the National Capital Region during protests against the Vietnam War.
- The President's inherent authority may be invoked to authorize DoD responses to terrorist actions that, if treated as traditional crimes, would ordinarily fall under the responsibility of law enforcement agencies. Inherent authority may be used only in extraordinary circumstances where normal measures are insufficient to carry out federal functions. It may not be exercised solely to perform routine and normal police functions (such as those types of front line law enforcement actions prohibited by the Posse Comitatus Act).
- In extreme circumstances, when there is no time to obtain higher level authorization, local commanders of DoD components are authorized to provide "immediate response" to save lives, prevent human suffering, or mitigate great property damage.

WASHINGTON, DC 20301-1000

OCT 2 8 2005

Ms. Marilyn Glynn General Counsel United States Office of Government Ethics 1201 New York Ave., NW Suite 500 Washington, DC 20005-3917

Dear Ms. Glynn:

I write to advise you of a matter of growing national importance that touches on one of the investments I have held since before becoming the Secretary of Defense in 2001. The matter involves avian flu, and my investment is Gilead Sciences, Inc. ("Gilead"), a corporation that holds the patent on, and receives royalties from, the production of the antiviral medication Tamiflu, which is currently considered a possible treatment and prevention for various influenzas.

After extensive consultations inside and outside the Federal Government, I want to describe for you clearly and with the maximum possible transparency the limitations on my potential involvement in preparations for a possible avian flu pandemic. My present course of action is intended to allow me to continue to discharge responsibilities that should not be delegated were there a pandemic in which the Department of Defense would be involved, without raising any legal issue or ethical issue – actual or perceived – were I to sell my shares of Gilcad common stock.

At my request, a number of senior officials of the Department of Defense, the Office of Government Ethics, the Department of Justice, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Office of the Counsel to the President have dedicated significant time and thought in considering this matter. A private securities attorney and my private accountant also have examined the various options available. I have considered a number of options, including: (i) divesting my Gilead common stock; (ii) retaining my Gilead common stock; (iii) recusing myself from participating in matters directly affecting Gilead; or (iv) a combination of approaches.

My relationship with Gilead began in 1988, when I joined the Company's Board of Directors. In 1997, I became the non-executive Chairman of Gilead's Board and served in that position until I became Secretary of Defense. At my confirmation as Secretary of Defense in 2001, divestiture of my investment in Gilead was not required. I am advised that Gilead was not then, and is not today, a defense contractor as that term is understood pursuant to the longstanding policy of the Senate Committee on Armed Services.

I have reported my personal ownership of Gilead common stock in each of my annual Public Financial Disclosure Reports. In addition to my investment shares, my qualified charitable foundation owns Gilead common stock. As provided for in my Ethics Agreement with the Senate Armed Services Committee in 2001, I transferred all investment responsibilities for my foundation to the foundation's secretary-treasurersince 1988, who is a friend and associate of many decades. He also now serves as non-executive Chairman of Gilead's Board.

Since 2001, upon assuming office as Secretary of Defense, I have recused myself from participating in any particular matter concerning Gilead. Such a recusal is a measure that has been approved by the Office of Government Ethics and the General Counsel of the Department of Defense. In recent months, there has been increased public discussion of the risk of an avian flu pandemic. When the possible threat of avian flu has been raised in government meetings, I have reiterated my recusal and have not participated in those discussions.

I understand from public reports that some uncertainty exists regarding whether Tamiflu may be effective in treating avian flu patients or preventing infection. I believe that I have no non-public information regarding the effectiveness of Tamiflu or as to how such uncertainty might affect government decision making. Since becoming Secretary of Defense, 1 have not received material non-public information from Gilead or its officers or directors.

In the event of an avian flu pandemic, the Department of Defense and I, as Secretary of Defense, could be expected to play some role in the Federal response. Recently, the President publicly discussed the risk of a pandemic, including a possible role for the Department.

The manner in which this national policy and this particular investment bave begun to converge led, after consultation, to a preliminary decision to divest my investment in Gilead common stock. Accordingly, I requested, and on September 21, 2005, the Office of Government Ethics issued a certificate of divestiture for this investment.

Following my preliminary decision to divest, and to ensure that such a divestiture would be, and would be perceived to be, lawful and ethical, I sought the advice of the Office of Government Ethics, the Office of the Counsel to the President, the General Counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Attorney General of the United States, and the General Counsel of the Department of Defense. I also have retained private counsel with expertise in securities law.

After reviewing multiple potential courses of action with private counsel, I have decided that I should not sell my Gilead common stock, and should remain recused from participating personally and substantially in particular matters that could have a direct and predictable effect on my financial interest in Gilead. My private securities counsel and I believe that the sale of my Gilead shares at this time would not raise a legitimate securities law issue. Nevertheless, I am advised that a risk exists that some person or entity might try to raise such a purported issue following a sale, given the public issues now surrounding avian flu and Tamiflu, and in view of my public position.

My recusal will continue to prohibit my involvement in decisions that the United States may make regarding Gilead, including the purchase or stockpiling of Tamiflu, competing medications, or other use of medications for the treatment or prevention of avian flu. Attached is the Department of Defense General Counsel memorandum of October 27,2005, that more fully describes this recusal.

Apart from the restrictions of this recusal, I would continue to discharge my responsibilities as Secretary of Defense for the purpose of overseeing Department of Defense preparations for whatever role might be assigned in response to a disaster of extraordinary magnitude. My involvement might include discussions of force planning, logistics or other support to state and local authorities, deployment of U.S. active duty or reserve component military forces, or other matters pertaining to the capabilities of the Department of Defense.

During the course of the extensive considerations recounted above, it was brought to my attention that the Department of Defense had placed an order for a specified quantity of Tamiflu. The order was placed on July 13,2005, not with Gilead, but with a U.S. subsidiary of F. Hoffman-LaRoche Ltd., a Swiss company that has the rights to market and manufacture the drug for Gilead. As I have been recused from decision making concerning Gilead, the order was placed properly without my knowledge or involvement.

I have been advised that neither the Senate Armed Services Committee nor the Department's ethics office believes that the order for Tamiflu qualifies Gilead as a defense contractor, as that term is understood pursuant to that Committee'spolicy. If Gilead were to become a defense contractor as defined by the Committee, as I undertook in my ethics agreement of January 18,2001, "I will consult with my Designated Agency Ethics Official to determine the appropriate remedial action."

Regrettably, none of the several relevant government agencies with which I have consulted has recommended a definitive course of action in this matter. I helieve that the manner in which I will continue to recuse myself of matters affecting Gilead, while discharging my responsibilities as Secretary of Defense in the event of an influenza pandemic, serves the public interest and is consistent with the legal advice I have received, and with applicable laws and policies.

Sincerely,

ul Rul

SUBJECT Recusal to Avoid Conflicts of Interest Concerning Gilead Sciences, Inc.

This memorandum is to remind you that Secretary Rumsfeld has a financial interest in Gilead Sciences, Inc., (Gilead). While Gilead has financial interests in a number of medications, in this memorandum 1 want to draw your attention to Tamiflu, a medication that may be used in the treatment and prevention of some types of avian influenza.

Secretary Rumsfeld continues to be disqualified from participating personally and substantially in any particular matter (including those dealing with the treatment and prevention of avian flu) when the matter will directly and predictably affect his financial interest in Gilead. This means that the Secretary may participate in most particular matters concerning avian flu, but be has disqualified himself as to matters that deal directly with Tamiflu or with medical prevention or treatment of avian flu, such as the purchase or use of alternative medical products. The following points should help to distinguish among these matters, but if there is a doubt about a particular issue, assume that the Secretary has disqualified himself from the issue at hand and seek guidance from me or the DoD Standards of Conduct Office:

- Matters concerning avian flu dealing with the development and acquisition by the Government of vaccines and/or treatments: The Secretary will not participate personally and substantially as these matters may directly and predictably affect G i 1 d Because Gileed developed, and receives a royalty for the production of, Tamiflu, which may be used to prevent or treat avian flu, and because there appear to be few such available products on the market, the Secretary has disqualified himself from participating in these matters.
- Matters concerning avian flu dealing with the possibility of quarantine and use of military personnel: The Secretary may participate personally and substantially as these matters will not directly and predictably affect Gilead. Even were Department of Defense resources to be used to safeguard the availability of Tamiflu, there would be no direct and predictable effect on Gilead because the product at that stage would already have been purchased from the distributor or distributors, F. Hoffman-LaRoche Itcl. and its subsidiaries.
- Matters concerning avian flu dealing with humanitarian assistance: The Secretary may participate personally and substantially as these matters will not directly and predictably affect Gilead. These matters concern providing food, water, shelter, and medical treatment, etc., to the victims of a pandemic, including possible avian flu, in the manner the Department provides assistance to the Federal Emergency Management Agency and other entities after natural catastrophes, such as hurricanes and earthquakes.

Please screen correspondence, memoranda, information and decision papers, and other documents that may refer to or involve Gilead, Tamiflu, and the medical prevention and treatment of avian flu.

Please divert all such matters to the Acting Deputy Secretary of Defense and ensure that they are not forwarded to Secretary Rumsfeld.

If you have any questions, please contact Steve Epstein or Gail Mason of the Standards of Conduct Office at emteins(iidodac.osd.milormasong@dodgc.osd.mil, or by telephone  $at_{(b)(6)}^{(b)(6)}$

SUBJECT: Joint Duty Assignment Credit (Snowflake at Tab B)

- You asked that we take a high-level, strategic look at the process for awardingjoint credit (Tab B); and a series of questions we answered at Tab A.
- Changes to make the joint duty credit system meet 21st century needs is the central god of the nearly complete Joint Officer Management Strategic Review. It was initiated to comply with direction from the FY05 Authorization Act. It is being conducted in concert with the Joint Staff, the Military Departments and RAND. A first draft will be ready next month.
- Key changes: (1) offer a "continuum" of joint credit, based on joint education, training, and experiences, unrestricted by time (e.g. assignment duration and/or sequencing) and (2) define "joint" based on objective criteria – recognizing coalition, international, interagency operations as well as in-Service billets that fit the criteria (3) recognize the significantly intense joint experience gained in a JTF with full joint duty credit.
- We constituted the Assistant Secretaries for Manpower of the Military Departments and the J1, among others, to look at these proposed changes. They agree with them. As you directed, we are also convening a group of General/Flag officers and Defense Policy Board members.
- Bottom line: If you agree with these key changes, they will form the basis of the Strategic Plan due to the Congress (by statute) by 15January 2006.

Joint Duty Assignment Credit Response to Specific Snowflake Questions

Q1. Are the time requirements to attain Joint Duty Credit still correct, e.g. 22 months for 0-6 and below with a waiver? 14 months for an 0-7 and above with a waiver? Al. NO – Current law constrains our flexibility to award full joint credit.

Q2. Are the right jobs identified and listed on the Joint Duty Assignment List? If not, what is a streamlined, modern system to quickly correct the list to reflect the reality for the 21st century?

A2. NO – The current JDAL does not capture all joint jobs however, a new system will require legislative change. The Joint Officer Management strategic plan will be integral to these changes.

Q3. How often should slots be reviewed to be added or deleted from the list? A3. Ideally this should be a continuous process. The current bi-annual review is not flexible enough.

Q4. Are people given appropriate credit for serving on a Joint Task Force? Is 12 months the right amount of time to obtain credit?

A4. NO – Intensity of the joint experience on a JTF in a combat or hostile environment is orders of magnitude greater than a staff position.

Q5. What "policy" changes can we undertake now to adjust the Joint Duty Credit system for the 21st century?

A5. Recent addition of 500+ (0-6 and below) and 28 GFO temporary billets to JDAL that are eligible for full credit will have significant and immediate impact Q6. What "legal" changes should we pursue to get the Joint Duty Credit system adjusted for the 21st century?

A6. A substantial package of legislative initiatives is required. The key is to tie legislation to the Joint Officer Management strategic plan, as requested by Congress.

SUBJECT: Joint Duty Assignment Credit

We need to take a high-level, strategic look at the process for awarding Joint Credit to our officers. The entire system seems to be based on the outdated assumption that the Services, in most cases, need to be forced into sending people intojoint billets. In today's world, the Services actually push to get their best people intojoint positions and into the Joint Task Forces around the world. Additionally, the acceleration and compression of joint combat activities makes many of the current monthly requirements out of date.

Please pull together a small team of smart folks from each of the Services to take a look at the entire process with a focus on answering the following questions:

What changes should we make in the Joint Duty Credit system to fit the 21st century? In particular:

- Are the time requirements to attain Joint Duty Credit still correct, e.g. 22 months for 0-6 and below with a waiver? 14 months for an 0-7 and above with a waiver?
- Are the right jobs identified and listed on the Joint Duty Assignment List? If not, what is a stream-lined, modem system to quickly correct the list to reflect the reality for the 21st century?

It is of utmost importance that the Investigation into the allegations of possible desecration of Taliban KIAs in Afghanistan by US Forces be completed expeditiously. As always, the investigation should be conducted in a manner that is thorough, definitive and in keeping with applicable laws, regulations and procedures. However, it is equally critical that this effort receive priority consideration by all relevant command and service channels as well as the provision of all resources necessary to facilitate its most rapid conclusion.

Please keep me informed on progress on this matter as well as your estimate on when you will reach a conclusion on the investigation.

- This responds to your question concerning the history of the current requirement for the Purple Heart and whether a case could be made for awarding the Purple Heart to members wounded, not as a result of enemy action, in a combat zone.
- The criteria for award of the Purple Heart are not based on "combat zones", but instead focused on the nature of the inflicting force. The criteria include international terrorist attacks, acts of hostile foreign forces, and friendly fire while engaged in armed conflict.
- The position of the Navy Department Board of Decorations and Medals is: "Anyone who is wearing a Purple Heart has encountered the enemy, either directly or indirectly. This goes to the core of the meaning of the Purple Heart."
- If an individual is wounded in a combat zone, but not as a result of direct or indirect enemy action, there are other means of recognizing their actions, if warranted.

You signed a document on December 2,2002 approving the use of enhanced interrogation techniques at Guantanamo (copy attached). The Church Report and internal documents confirm that military lawyers did object to the use of those techniques prior to your signing the document; however, there does not appear to be any record that you were made aware of those complaints prior to December 2.

Internal records indicate that the first time you were informed of military concerns was January 10,2003 when you were told by Jim Haynes of the Navy General Counsel's expression of concern. You immediately rescinded the use of the December 2 memo and ordered a review. This review led to your April 16,2003 approval of a more restrictive interrogation policy. 22

Here is your paper on detainees. I have made many edits, which will have to be checked with the General Counsel and people who know more than I do.

I have these additional thoughts:

- We only mention the three civilians and very few military leaders. For inclusiveness, we also should address each key senior military and civilian official in the testimony:
  - o the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense,
  - o the Secretary and Under Secretary of the Army,
  - o the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff,
  - o the Combatant Commanders and Deputies,
  - o the Commanders and Deputy Commanders in Iraq,
  - the Chief and Vice Chief of Staff of the Army,
  - o the head and deputy of the training and doctrine command,
  - o the Reserve and Guard leaders during the relevant periods,
  - o the individuals who served as Executive Agents for detainees, and
  - o the relevant GTMO officials.
- 2. We ought to specifically mention vacancies -- that the position of Secretary of the Army was vacant, state how long that and other vacancies were, and point out that the Army is the Executive Agent for detainces. In additiou, we ought to show the high level of overall civilian vacancies throughout the Department during that four and a half years and raise that issue.

11-L-0559/OSD/53799 OSD 21448-05

- 3. We ought to have a section that lists a series of the irresponsible charges that have been made about GTMO detainees, etc., and point out specifically how wild charges by prominent people hurts the morale of the men and women in uniform. Discuss the adverse effects that occur from irresponsible allegations and statements in terms of weakening the US position in the world, e.g., the "Newsweek riots," etc.
- 4. We also should list some things we are concerned about -- for example:
  - the long time it took the Army to act in establishing accountability.
     We have to find ways to speed up that process in the 21st century;
  - the confusion between the operational and administrative chains of command in regard to investigations and accountability under Goldwater-Nichols.
- 5. Our presentation must include all the material that is currently in the detainee briefing I presented to the NSC and the President. We have to make sure everyone understands the facts -- what we've done, the reforms we've undertaken, etc. We need to say who these detainees are, what we've done to ensure all our detention centers are well nnr, and emphasize that GTMO should not be closed. This material shouldn't be an appendix. It should all be in the statement.
- 6. After we think we have a decent presentation, we should have it reviewed by the Departments of State and Justice, the White House, the Schlesinger panel, Church, and certainly by all the officials who are mentioned.

Lahel it draft on every page.

ABU GHRAIB LETTER ADDRESSED TO HASC AND SASC CHAIRMEN Juing The Might Strat And [2405 Words] Mr. Chairman: J. Migen and This 6 nutree to doulthe treated A year ago, V testified to Congress about the a of prisoners at the Abu Ghraib prison and on other detainee matters. I remember the emotional body blow that hit all of us at the Department of Defense, and I wish the public could have seen the pained expressions on the faces of our civilian and military personnel when we saw the shocking pictures from Abu Ghraib. The terrible criminal acts there stained the In Acresta Interion mage of our nation and the millions of American servicemen and women who serve selflessly and courageously in the cause of freedom. As I said at the time, those crimes took place nn my watch, and as Secretary of Defense, Laccept responsibility.

As Secretary of Defense, I have command and executive responsibility for the actions of this Department and am-accountable for its performance. To me, accountability is not an abstract concept. On 5/25/2005 1:33 PM Walker DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) two occasions, I submitted my resignation, in writing and in person, to President George W. Bush. I felt that the President deserved the option of deciding whether someone else should lead the Department.

In my testimony, [pledged full cooperation with your Committee and the Congress and a comprehensive review of this matter. I promised that the Department would follow the facts wherever they led, bring wrongdoers to justice, amplify the record as more information was learned, review the Department's procedures, and implement appropriate reforms. I invited the world to watch how America's democracy deals with wrongdoing and with the pain of acknowledging and correcting our Department's mistakes.

Over the last twelve months the Department's leadership has made it a priority to find out what happened, take appropriate action, and make changes to prevent detained abuse from happening again. The Department leadership -- military and civilian -- has been working toimplement reforms to improve detention operations, prevent abuse, and determine and establish accountability in accordance with law, the Uniformed Code of Military Justice, and the best interests of the Department and the nation.

We have initiated, completed, reviewed, and acted upon the results of 10 major reviews, investigations, and assessments. We have analyzed over 400 recommendations from the many reports, testified at 29 Congressional hearings, provided over 40 Congressional staff briefings, and delivered more than 16,000 pages of documents to The Mithy Congress. Additionally, the Services have initiated over 360 criminal investigations involving [XX] personnel to determine the facts in  ${}^{\prime}\!{}^{\prime}\!{}^{\prime}\!{}^{\prime}$ alleged incidents of detainee maltreatment and abuse the outset, the Department has domonstrated its^rcommitment to transparency and to fully investigating all allegations of abuye lot important to temember that it was the Department of De 7 and investimated first disclosed the Abu Ghraib akuse allegations. The launch of the original Central Command investigation into Abu Ghraib was announced at a press conference in Baghdad and reported by the national media three months before the photos were released to the public by the media. And since then, nearly every piece of detaineeto noncon related information reported by leurnalists or employed by critics has come from the Department investigations and reports. In spite Irreparks Chaser of that fact, the Department has faced a persistent chorus of 'coverBut the fact - the Understand from prominent yoices around the country. The fact - the Understand fact is the c There has been no "cover-up" or "whitewash", when salles I charger of the Gradient mot with Stand in ...

We pive the Congress, the American people and the world a full and transparent accounting for Abu Ghraib. The Department of Defense has attempted to do so, but our effort has been hampered by reckless charges and publication of unsupported allegations and erroneous information by people and organizations of high standing in this country. And, I am not talking about AI Jazerra. A good example of this is the Pavlovian response to the investigations and reports completed by the Department by some of our nation's leading newspapers. Misinformation, ignorance and twisted truths are a disservice to the American people and the world.

The ten major reviews have provided the Department with invaluable regarding criminal and administrative accountability. The reviews and investigations were led by respected and accomplished individuals, including XX active duty general officers, a former Chief of Staff of the U.S. Air Force, two former Secretaries of Defense and a former Member of Congress. DRAFT 20 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) Each of these citizens has earned a reputation as a person of character and integrity over their life time of public service. The choice of these principled individuals to head the investigations is sound evidence of the Department's commitment to follow the facts where they lead and let the chips fail where they may. Yet in many cases, the work they did for the Department on this matter has been summarily dismissed by the editorial boards of several national newspapers as "whitewash" and "cover-up", without offering evidence to support their allegations.

These unsubstantiated and I believe baseless attacks on the integrity of these citizens and their work unfairly undermines the contribution these reports should make to the public's understanding of the matter. It sickens me that our standards for public discourse on this issue have sunk to a level where character assassination of distinguished citizen by voices of national prominence and cavalier dismissal of their important work are accepted practices and pass into the public debate unsubstantiated and without challenge to those (making the charges.

If critics have evidence of cover-up by any of these leaders, it is their duty to come forward, name the individual(s) and support their charges of cover up. The stakes are too high they should put up or shut up. To do otherwise deserves public censure. The effort to bring justice and fitting closure to this matter has been ill-served by such demagoguery.

Chernic Abu Ghraib Accountability. The Department, through judicial and administrative processes, is holding wrongdoers accountable, While the process is not complete, for misconduct and dereliction of duty related to Abu Ghraib, thus far, nineteen men and women, from privates to a brigadier general, have been disciplined for misconduct -Of this total, seven soldiers from military police and military intelligence, units have been court-martialed and found guilty, with sentences up to 10 years in prison. The brigadier general in command of the military police brigade with a unit at Abu Ghraib and the colonel in command of the military intelligence brigade at Abu Ghraib were both reprimanded and removed from command. Additionally, the brigadier general has been reduced in rank to colonel. A lieutenant colonel in charge of the military intelligence interrogation activities at Abu Ghraib remains under investigation, with command disposition pending.

As part of the Abu Ghraib investigation, the Army Inspector General investigated all allegations against ten general officers and found them maximum unsubstantiated except for the brigadier general discussed above. Additional actions, investigative, criminal-and administrative, are pending against other military personnel, officers and enlisted. Further, the Department of Justice is investigating the conduct of civilian the Department of Defense and Justice will pursue these actions to their just conclusion.

The brents depicted in the Abu Ghraib photos were criminal acts by those who were involved in them. The leaders who were responsible for the supervision of those individuals and for the care of detainees the brend for the supervision of those individuals and for the care of detainees were derelict in performing their duties. Those responsible are being minuted was detained to the held accountable. The events at Abu Ghraib were not the result of the actions or inactions of more senior military leaders. This has been fully investigated. Accountability has been established.

Senior Leader Accountability. Some have expressed concerns that no civilian or military leader at the Pentagon, and no senior military leader above a brigadier general, has been punished in the wake of abuse at Abu Ghraib. To be sure, when something as solver and damasing as solver abuses comes to light, it is understandable that there is a demand by some that "heads should roll" --eno-matter what. However, the process of establishing accountability must be driven by the facts, fairness and the established legal and administrative processes.

In considering the conduct of senior civilian and military officials related to Abu Ghraib, I asked the questions, and, 1)"Were the recommendations or decisions of senior officials in violation of the standards governing the control of detained persons?"; and 2)"Did the policies, acts or omissions of senior officials result, directly or other Te wild State T and one for officials indirectly, in the abuses discovered at Abu Ghraib?"; found the

After reviewing all the available evidence, including my personal recollection of the senduct of senior Department officials and the Schlesinger and Church accounts, I have concluded that senior officials were not eulpable or responsible for the criminal acts committed at Abu Ghraib. Further, I have found no evidence that any of the policies or directives from the Department were in contravention of the operative standards for detention operations in either Iraq Afghanistan or Guantanamo. Accordingly, I find no grounds to sanction senior DoD civilian or military officials for the misconduct at Abu Ghraib.

Detention and interrogation operations at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo were conducted under different legal standards, Abu Ghraib under Geneva and Guantanamo under a legal construct established by the President for unlawful combatants,

The detention operations at Abu Ghraib were part of Operation Iraqi Freedom. It was clear from the outset of hostilities that all detention and interrogation policies for Iraq were required to be in accordance with Geneva. This was well understood by those who planned and conducted Operation Iraqi Freedom operations.

The detainees at Guantanamo were managed under a different standard, established by President Bush on January 18, 2002. The president determined that AI Qaeda and Taliban detainees under the control of the Department of Defense are "unlawful combatants" and not entitled to prisoner of war protections under the Geneva Conventions .He also determined that, as a matter of policy, the United States will, "treat those detainees humanely and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with military necessity, in a manner consistent with the principles of the Geneva Conventions." ß

DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM)

On January 19, 2002, I issued an order to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for promulgation to all Combatant Commanders implementing the President's policy. The Chairman promulgated the order on January 21, 2002 and it remains in effect today. In a February 4, 2002 policy directive, the President more fully developed the Administration policy on Taliban and AI Qaeda detainees. The President reaffirmed that Taliban and AI Qaeda detainees. The President reaffirmed that Taliban and AI Qaeda fighters were unlawful combatants. Based on those distinctions and legal conclusions, President Bush reiterated the legal standard for Guantanamo, "the United States Armed Forces shall...treat detainees humanely and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with military necessity, in a manner consistent with the principles of the Geneva" and reaffirmed my

Underscoring-the standard of humane treatment, President Bush said further that "our values as a Nation, values that we share with many nations in the world, call for us to treat detainees humanely, including those who are not legally entitled to such treatment." (Document is attached.)

The President's decision that AI Qaeda and Taliban fighters are unlawful combatants is irrefutable as they conduct their operations in a manner anathema to the principles of Geneva: i) they target innocent civilians, ii) they do not answer to a chain of command, iii) they do not carry their arms openly, iv) they do not operate according to the laws of war and international conflict, and iv) they do not wear identifiable insignias or uniforms. The President's decision was based on the bedrock principles that undergird Geneva and stands as an affirmation of our nation's commitment to its just application.

1:33 PM Walker 5/25/2005 DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) The senior Department officials, military and civilian, in the Pentagon involved in detention and interrogation policy understood the different governing standards for Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo and worked scrupulously to ensure that all policies developed by the Department were in accordance therewith. All policy decisions regarding detention rogation operations were subjected to stringent legal review tel here and within the Department, The Department's policies required humane treatment of all detainees and no policy promulgated by the Department could reasonably have been interpreted to endorse the the milling different criminal conduct we found at Abu Ghraib. This conclusion is supported by the findings of the Schlesinger and Church reports.

The Schlesinger review -- led by two former Secretaries of Defense who served Presidents of each party -- concluded: "No approved procedures called for or allowed the kinds of abuse that in fact occurred."

The Church report, headed by the then Navy Inspector General, found similarly: "None of the approved policies -- no matter which version the interrogators followed -- would have permitted the types of abuse that occurred." The Schlesinger and Church investigations both considered the detention and interrogation policies promulgated by senior DoD officials and neither found any policy condoning torture or establishing an environment where abuse or torture was acceptable. In fact, they found just the opposite, policies that required "humane" treatment.

Both reports did, however, find failings and "missed opportunities" in detention operations across all theaters of the global struggle against extremism and concluded that senior leaders in the Department shared in the shortcomings. We have reviewed those findings and the findings of other investigations and have concluded that while there were institutional failings, they were not due to personal culpability or the failure of senior military or civilian leaders. The Department was not properly organized nor fully prepared for the challenges thrust upon us by the attacks of September 11, 2001.

For the Department's institutional failings, I have concluded that the punishment of senior civilian and military officials is not warranted. That is my responsibility and I accept it. I also accept the responsibility to change the institution where necessary and that Haynes, Feith, and Cambone and

Some have raised concerns about three of the Department's most senior officials who perform significant roles as advisors to me in developing policies for the global struggle against extremism: Under Secretary for Policy Doug Feith, Under Secretary for Intelligence Steve Cambone, and General Counsel Jim Haynes.

Before addressing their conduct and performance individually, I want to make one point that is fundamental in assessing the accountability of all three individuals and their staffs and recall information that has come to light since most of the allegations against these men were made.

First, as Secretary of Defense, I am in the chain of command. They are not. They are advisors. I am free to accept or reject their advice. I am accountable for the wisdom of my decisions regarding their. advice. That is in accordance with the system set up by the laws of the United States, and that is consistent with my conscience and principles of leadership. [would have it no other way: Secondly, recent statements by the soldiers who engaged in the infamous acts at Abu Ghraib undercut the argument that any of these three men should be held responsible for that abusive behavior.

⁶Lyndie England, photographed holding the leash around the neck of a naked prisoner, told investigators, we "were joking around having some fun during the night shift. I knew it was wrong because who would morally do something like that in a U.S.prison. She said further, "I had a choice, but I did what my friends wanted me to do."

SPC Jeremy Sivits said, "I apologize to the Iraqi people and to those detainees. I want to apologize to the Army, to my unit, to the country. I've let everybody down. That's not me. I should have protected the detainees. It was wrong. It shouldn't have happened."

SSG Ivan Frederick said, "I was wrong about what I did and I shouldn't have done it".

SPC Sabrina Harman told investigators, "As a soldier and military police officer, I failed my duty and failed my mission to protect and defend. I not only let down the people in Iraq, but I let down every single soldier that served today. I take full responsibility for my actions. I do not place blame on my chain of command or others I worked with during this time. The decisions I made were mine and mine alone. I am truly sorry."

Without going further, I could conclude that Feith, Cambone and Haynes had no responsibility for the abuses at Abu Ghraib and deserve no sanction. But, I want to go further, because they deserve a public accounting of the job they did for our nation.

I have reviewed the account of their performance in the Schlesinger and Church reports, and furthermore, I can speak with personal knowledge of their conduct, integrity, and judgment. I worked with these individuals on a daily basis during the time period at issue. They understood the operative legal standards for Iraq and Guantanamo. Every significant policy initiative was thoroughly vetted to ensure compliance with the applicable legal standards. None of these men proposed or condoned abuse or torture or endorsed a policy that would permit detainee abuse.

As far as specific charges levied against each of them, they are difficult to address because of the lack of legal or intellectual rigor required in the public forum in which they have been made. But, I feel it is important to attempt to do so.

of Defense

Feith: Mr. Feith is the Under Secretary for Policy for the Department and held that ich during the time period at issue. His critics have connected him to the abuse at Abu Ghraib through a three step process: i) by falsely characterizing the Administration's determination of the legal status of the Al Qaeda and Taliban detainees at Guantanamo as permitting abuse, ii) improperly attributing that decision to Feith, and iii) making the tenuous connection between that decision and the conduct of the soldiers on a night shift at Abu Ghraib. The argument fails on all three points.

fin,

As discussed earlier, President Bush determined that AI Qaeda and Taliban detainees are unlawful combatants and established the governing standard for their detention and interrogation. The President made it clear in his directive that all detainees will be treated humanely as did I in my order promulgated to all Combatant Commanders. Any instance of abusive conduct would be in violation of Administration policy. But, regardless of the substance of the policy, it was President Bush, not Date Feith, who made that decision.

The critics' argument that there is a connection between the January 2002 decision on the legal status of AI Qaeda and Taliban detainees at Guantanamo and the conduct of the night shift at Abu Ghraib in November and December 2003 lacks any credible evidence. The President directive was clear – it could not be read to allow abusive conduct nor could it be read to apply to raqi operations. And, the officers in command of Operation Iraqi Freedom have testified before the Congress that there was never any confusion about the proper legal standard. They understood that Iraq was a Geneva conflict and planned and commanded with that as a governing principle.

Å

Even if you were to accept the specious argument advanced by some whet were clearly illeged that the decision tacitly endorsed a busive practices, the statements by the soldiers who participated in the abuse dispel any notion that it influenced their conduct.

Accordingly, I find no evidence to support sanctioning Mr. Feith for what happened at Abu Ghraib.

Cambone: It is difficult to summarize the allegations against Dr. Cambone. They range from vague innuendo from various sources to the buirageous fiction of Seymour Hersh. As I understand it, bis critics connect him to the abuse at Abu Ghraib by claiming he put undue pressure on interrogators at that facility and by attributing to him the decision to send MG Geoffrey Miller to Iraq in August 2003. I find no evidence that Dr.Cambone exerted undue pressure on interrogators. Regarding the decision on MG Miller, it was neither an unreasonable decision nor was it made by Dr.Cambone. Further —, there is no evidence connecting MG Miller to the Abu Ghraib

Dr. Cambone is Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence and held that position during the time period at issue. He is the chief advisor on intelligence matters. Among his duties is the responsibility to advise me how to support the intelligence structure in Iraq and ensure that the cc mmander has the necessary coordination and support from the intelligence community.

As is true today, there was pressure to get intelligence on enemy operations during the time period when the abuses at Abu Ghraib countred. The enemy was killing coalition soldiers and good intelligence could save lives. If there had not been pressure that would have been dereliction of duty.

Dr. Cambone was not in the chain of command, but I would expect him to do all within his power to support the intelligence effort, according to the laws and policies governing the conflict. I found no credible evidence that he applied improper pressure or that he did anything in violation of law or  $M_{0}$  and  $M_{0$  5/25/2005 1:33 PM Walker Well DRAFT 2.0(Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) been established that the crimes committed at Abu Ghraib were not related to intelligence collection.

Regarding MG Geoff Miller's mission to Iraq: the decision to send MG Miller to Iraq was made between CJTF-7 and the Joint Staff, following a CJTF-7 request for assistance with detention and interrogation operations. I understand that Dr. Cambone agreed with the decision, but he did not make the decision. MG Miller had successfully reorganized the operations at Guantanamo and it was believed that "lessons learned" from even the init is that was believed that "lessons learned" from even the init is that was believed that "lessons learned" from even the init is that sending MG Miller to Iraq was a reasonable response to the CJTF-7 request for assistance. I cannot find fault with that decision.

Accordingly, I find no credible evidence to support sanctioning He filled Action Dr.Cambone for what happened at Abu Ghraib.

Haynes. Mr. Haynes is General Counsel of the Department and held that position during the time period at issue. He has been criticized by media DRAFT 2.0(Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) and prominent politicians over the course of the debate about prisoner abuse at Abu Ghraib because of a recommendation he made to me in November 2002 regarding a SOUTHCOM request for expanded interrogation authorities. His critics contend that his legal advice in November 2002 set in motion a chain of events that sent Pvt Graner and his cohorts into "Animal House" mode at Abu Ghraib in November and December 2003.

5/25/2005 1:33 PM Walker

On November 27,2002, Mr. Haynes offered me counsel on a request from SOUTHCOM for enhanced interrogation tactics for use at Guantanamo. As discussed above, the legal standard for the operations at Guantanamo differed from Iraq and was established by a Presidential determination in January 2002. After considering the applicable legal standard and consulting with other senior Department officials, Mr. Haynes recommended that I approve some, but not all of the requested tactics. In other words, he recommended a more restrained interrogation policy than had been requested by SOUTHCOM. I made the decision to follow bis advice and signed out a memo to SOUTHCOM, dated December 2, 2002 approving certain interrogation practices. His advice and my decision were limited to Guantanamo.

If anyone used these techniques elsewhere, at another time, or without the proper controls and oversight, they were acting in violation of the policy decision I made, and on which Mr. Haynes advised me. I cannot fault Mr. Haynes if that happened; however, I found no evidence that the December 2, 2002 decision or its applications during the six weeks it was in effect factored into the consideration of the soldiers who committed the crimes at Abu Ghraib.

Mr Hour Jose To my knowledge, neither be nor I was ever asked to approve interrogation guidance for Iraq, nor did either of us do so. CENTCOM officers made decisions on Iraq interrogation practices without any consultation with me or Mr. Haynes. They so testified before the Congress last summer. I am not aware of any evidence to the contrary. 5/25/2005 1:33PM Walker DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) Accordingly, I find no credible evidence to support sanctioning Mr. Haynes for what happened at Abu Ghraib on the Nymeric for half & welc and for the ILD leave to the information available I have In summary, considering all of the information available I have Mr. Feith, Dr. Cambone and Mr. Haynes should not be sanctioned for the crimes committed at Abu Ghraib. On the contrary, for they are other provided to our country at a time of great national need.

Having served this nation both in uniform and in the Congress, Mr. Chairman, you understand that war poses hard choices and requires constant improvisation, Decision-makers are asked to consider life and death issues often without precedents, in real time and without the benefit of hindsight. History will judge their efforts, and a just history will consider the context of the tumultuous and dangerous times during which they served their country.

The global struggle against extremised presented the Defense Department and other executive branch departments with unprecedented challenges. Captured terrorists like Mohamed al-Khatani, a detainee at Guantanamo identified by the 9/11 Commission as the twentieth hijacker, possess actionable intelligence that could save American lives, including information about suspected AI Qaeda operations in the United States.

5/25/2005 1 :33PM Walker DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM)

Among the toughest decisions the Department faced in the struggle against extremism were those involving new interrogation methods ferdetainees. It was known that captured terrorists had been trained in tactics for resisting established methods of interrogation. We knew – and the 9/11 Commission subsequently agreed – that the law enforcement strategy of the past was insufficient in the face of suicide terrorists. And we knew that old doctrines, old rules, and old training could not effectively combat the enemy who had brought such violence to our shores, and who was and is still committed to dored from leafer the stormy present.

After September 11, 2001, the senior civilian and military leadership were required to confront difficult issues in uncharted times. Senior leaders made hard choices on behalf of our nation. They are men and women of conscience. While in retrospect, clearly not perfect, they acquitted themselves honorably and well.

Accountability For Detainee Mistreatment Elsewhere. As further evidence of the Department's commitment to accountability, I want to review briefly the record of investigations involving allegations of detainee mistreatment for all of Iraq and Afghanistan. We investigate AS Oren HI the Borto hor all credible allegations of detainee mistreatment and have launched over 380 mistreatment investigations, ranging from petty theft to homicide. Beyond Abu Ghraib, thus far, XXX Soldiers, 8 Sailors and 23 Marines have been punished for misconduct involving detainees. This is a significant number and the number will increase as investigations and administrative and judicial proceedings move ahead. But it is important to remember that the number of U.S. troops involved in misconduct is a small percentage of the more than one million troops who have served in the global struggle against extremism. (Further details on accountability for misconduct are included in an attached document

Addressing Institutional Shortcomings. Individual accountability alone will not, however, address the institutional shortcomings. At the same time, we must correct and improve the institutional failings. And the Acc-Accountability involves not only fixing the blame, but fixing the problem. I mmmy predict, fixed and exectin. i

First, there must be a clear system of accountability, starting at the political level. I have appointed a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Detainee Affairs. The Army has made the Provost Marshal General an executive agent for detainee operations, and General Abizaid has assigned a two star officer to take charge of all detention and interrogation operations in Iraq.

Second, we must be more effective in translating policy into effective action. That requires clear doctrine and procedures. The Department has turned to this task, and much of our refreshed doctrine and procedures is now in place.

committed to seeing every necessary reform implemented. (A list of some [XX] reforms is included in an attached document.)  $\int \int bw$

Realigning Authority, Responsibility,-and Accountability. I would make one final point regarding military accountability. Among the many lessons we have learned since September 11, 2001, as highlighted and perhaps epitomized by the Abu Ghraib scandal, is that we live in an era in which the methods of establishing accountability are uneven among the services and other DoD components.

And, in retrospect, there is a lack of clarity in oversight responsibilities for detainee operations between the Army, as the Executive Agent for administration of DoD's Enemy POW and their Detainees Program

I am concerned that there is confusion between authority, responsibility, and accountability between the warfighting and the administrative chains of command which DoD has not fully resolved in implementing the Goldwater-Nichols Act of 1986.

Whatever the source of the problem, the length of time it has taken for the Army and the Combatant Commander to establish he my menne hor been apallio - 1.5 5/25/2005 1:33PM Walker DRAFT 2.0 (Corrections to Draft 6/20/2005 @ 1:10 PM) accountability at Abu Ghraib/underscores the need for a review of our investigative and legal practices and assignment of responsibilities. I have directed the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Acting please mute that he has to the not lease contract for the or ferres , Deputy Secretary of Defense to assess institutional shortcomings in order to better understand and address this problem. We will work with your committee and of Hen Deten in The Importance of Interrogations. Although the abuse see DI 1afrom Abu Ghraib was not a part of authorized interrogations, abase has led some critics to discount the value of questioning detainees. This thinking loses sight of the fact that, in the global struggle against violent extremists, one of America's most important tools is intelligence. The best intelligence often comes from captured detory combatants. While it is essential that they always be treated 010 ar govere humanely, it is imperative that we obtain the information from them that can save Americans' lives. For example, intelligence from detainees has led to the capture of Khalid Sheik Mohammed, Saddam Jone Hussein, and 22 terrorists in Germany plotting attacks in January 2005, jast to name a few examples. ł

A final word about America's men and women in uniform. They They had free deserve far better than the impression left by the scandalous pictures A

Dne should remer ber that while XXX service members have been found responsible for misconduct involving detainees, more than one million men and women in uniform have served honorably in the global struggle against extremism, and more than 70,000 detainees have passed through our system? The overwhelming majority of the uniform military responsible for detainees has handled its responsibilities with skill, dedication and professionalism. We must not allow the occasional breach of discipline by a few blind us to the bigger picture -- that the men and women of America's military are selfless defenders of all we hold dear , including the worth and dignity of every human being. And that America is not what's wrong with the world

Mr. Chairman, I share with you and the American people deep disappointment and outrage over the crimes committed at Abu Ghraib and elsewhere. And I believe today, as I pledged a year ago, that those who were responsible at Abu Ghraib must be held accountable, that reforms must continue, but that misguided sensationalism must not be allowed to manipulate those crimes, twist the truth, and distort America's meaning and mission.

Northridge Earthqueke. The Northridge earthqueke (6.7 on the Richter scale) Jammary of 1994 within seconds reduced to rubble the overpass bridges of Interstate 10, the most heavily trafficked freeway in the world. Governor Pete Wilson was advised that repair of the bridges to restore use of 1-10 would two years and two months because of the extended public hearing requirements imposed by law.

- a Emergency Powers for a Governor Can Speed Recovery. The California Government Code confers upon the Governor emergency powers, including legal authority to suspend for the duration of the emergency the operation of regulation and even statute if their application would impose requirements that would impede or delay recovery. Governor Wilson was advised that repair of the bridges to restore use of I-10 would two years and two months because of the extended public hearing requirements imposed by law. The Governor promptly suspended the operation of these requirements.
- h Performance Contracting Can Speed Recovery. Governor Wilson added a condition to the bridge reconstruction bidding. In addition to the amount bid on the contract to repair the bridges and the date the work would be completed, he required the bidders to agree to a bonns/penalty condition: for each day in advance of the agreed upon completion date, the winning bidder would receive a bonus of $200,000 (substantially less than the estimated $600,000 per day economic loss being suffered for each day until use of I-10 could be restored); and for each day that the contractor was late, the contractor would incur a penalty of $200,000.

The winning bilder made more on the bonus than he did on the bid; and 1-10 was restored to public use not in two years and two months but in two months and two days.

This was a reduction in time of approximately 85% from what was initially estimated.

Copies of the contracts that governed the rebuilding of the 1-10bridges are on file at the offices of CalTrans (the Department of Transportation within the state Business, Transportation and Housing Agency) in Sacramento. The winning bidder was a general contractor named C. C. Myers who resides in Sacramento,

- Citizens' everyday experience is UPS, Fed-Ex, the Internet, blackberries/treos, cellphones with camera, eBay, Google, ATMs, Amazon.com, e-ticketing with Travelocity and Expedia level of knowledge and choice. Citizens expect this same standard from government.
- Government at the Federal, State, and local level totally failed this standard in responding to Katrina.

Failure of Government Response to Katrina Especially Sobering in a post-9/1 America

- By Homeland Security standards, Katrina was not an unexpected or exceptionally large event
- Katrina is precisely what Homeland Security was supposed to be able to manage
- A real test for Homeland Security would be a natural or engineered pandemic (1918 flu) or 3 nuclear events in 3 cities on the same morning
- Since Homeland Security is designed for a world of such events, its standard should be a real time response to the unexpected with minimum loss of American lives
- The initial response to Katrina did not meet this standard

Principles and Values for Katrina Recovery: Special Application for Three Groups of Dependency

Three Groups of Dependency

- 1. Those who have no effective habits;
- 2. The Frail (elderly, accident, or disability);
- 3. The violent and the anti-social

Minimize

-Return the underprivileged to where they were

-Return to bad public housing and bad schools in bad neighborhoods with no change in personal skills -We want the underprivileged to move forward to better lives

-Transition to work and independence

-Include all elements of the community in creating a better, more modem, and more prosperous Gulf Coast

We Must Develop a Metrics-Based System to Measure Katrina Recovery

- Recognizing that current government bureaucracies that are agency-siloed and process oriented systems simply cannot deliver at the speed and accuracy of the Information Age is the key first step.
  - Even with computers we have Information Age technology with Industrial Era work processes.
    - The private sector is proving every day that we can achieve far more agility, with far more effectiveness, at far lower cost.

You cannot expect what you do not inspect!

Metrics Based System for Measuring Katrina Recovery

- One of the keys to develop effective government in the information age is to focus on metrics of outside effect rather than reports on inside processes.
- The 1880s civil service model of Bureaucratic Public Administration, that we inherited, is based on an era of quill pens. It is inherently process oriented.
- A 21st Century model of Entrepreneurial Public Management will require an entirely new definition of acceptable outcomes, a method for monitoring outcomes and changing behaviors, and a coordinating system of accurate timely information unlike anything we currently have.

Why the Transformation to a Metric-Based System Should be a Very High Priority

- It is impossible for the current systems, bureaucratic cultures, and patterns of silo-focus and process orientation to keep up with the complexities and speed of the modern world, or to implement policy decisions in a timely, effective manner in a rapidly changing world.
- Until we have made the transition from bureaucratic public administration to entrepreneurial public management, we will continue to be overwhelmed by events and frustrated by the inability to implement decisions even when they have been made at the highest level.
- We are not having policies undermined by personality problems of incompetence. We are being undermined by culturally and systemically obsolete processes. Only cultural and systemic change will make us effective once again.

First Steps

- 1. Bi-Cameral Katrina Recovery Working Group. This group should be empowered to reach out to all federal agencies and state governments, and to bring in outside advisers. It should be assigned the tasks of reporting by October 1, 2005 on:
  - A. Defining the scale and nature of the desired results (what is success for the Gulf Coast out to 2015)?
  - B. What are the methods necessary to achieve those results?
  - C. What transformational changes should be undertaken to achieve those results?
  - D. What are the metrics the Congress should use to monitor progress and insist on improvements?

16 DRAFT © 2005 Girigrich Communications

First Steps (con't)

- 2. The Bi-Cameral Katrina Recovery Working Group should immediately stand up a bi-cameral Assessment Center on Katrina Recovery in the Capitol.
- Every algorificant system requires a reporting process comparable to the COMSTAT and TEAMS reporting instituted by Mayor Giuliani in the New York City Police Department and the Prisons. Giuliani's Leadership is a good introduction to the concept of COMSTAT and similar reporting and managing tools.
- Every significant strategy requires an Assessment Room in which the senior leadership can visibly see all the key data and review the totality of the strategy's implementation in one sweeping overview. Determining what metrics should be used to define success and maintaining those metrics with accuracy is a major part of this process.
- William J. Bratton, now Chief of LAPD, plonsered COMSTAT as NY Transit Police Chief and stands ready to help advise the development of Katrina Assessment Center.
- The key is for senior leadership to constantly (weekly in key areas, monthly and quarterly in others) review the data and make changes in a collaborative way with the team charged with implementing the system. We must also have a tough minded willingness to keep changing strategies, systems and personnel until things work at all three implementation levels.
- The absence of COMSTAT systems, the absence of Assessment Rooms, and the absence of routine review is a major factor in the ineffectiveness and inefficiency of the Federal Government in almost every department, "You get what you inspect not what you expect" is an old management tule. If no one knows what is going to be inspected and if no data is available for inspection it should not surprise us that the current system also does not function very well.

3. This Bi-Cameral Working Group should use a system of iterative briefings and listening sessions, especially with Gulf Coast delegations, to spread widely the network of people thinking through the key challenges and helping develop the very large changes required.

(This iterative briefing-listening system develop at the Army's Training and Doctrine Command in 1979 maximizes the quality of advice in the planning process, surfaces problems in the formulative stage, and makes buy in dramatically easier.)

Examples of Katrina Recovery Metrics

- 1. What number of people in temporary housing? How quickly is this number being reduced?
- 2. Speed of Pumping Out Water.
- 3. Speed of Removing Debris.
- 4. Speed of Environmental Cleanup.
- 5; What% of federal recovery appropriations is through tax credits? Our goal should be 50%
- 6. How well will federal recovery funds be tracked?
- 7. How many incentivized contracts have been released so far?
  - See Governor Wilson model with post-Northridge earthquake bridge reconstruction performance contracts.
- 8. How many electronic health records/personal health records have been established among the displaced?
- 9. What number of the displaced without health insurance have been walked through getting at least catastrophic coverage?
- 10. How many displaced on Medicaid have cash vouchers to purchase needed healthcare?
- 11. How many Pell Grants have been distributed to the displaced population that is eligible?
- 12. Have we identified the right local leaders who have a stake in Katrina recovery who can be allies in pushing forward our vision?
- 13. How quickly are the local universities being put back online? How many students are returning?
- 14. What level of electricity service has been restored?
- 15. What benchmarks for trash removal?
- 16. Have we found a way to take care of pets in recovery?
- 17. Have we set up a lessons learned system in all the areas we need to learn from this experience? (Liquor, guns, and flat screens.)
- 18. Mow quickly are the top 20 institutions in New Orleans being put back into operation?
- 19. How quickly is the system responding to obstacles to recovery surfaced by top 20 institutions in New Orleans?

FOR SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

FROM General Peter Pace, CJCS VAR Row 30 02 05

SUBJECT: Paper From Newt Gingrich on Katrina Recovery (SF 091905-39)

- Answer. In response to your question (TAB), Mr. Gingrich's recommendation of a collaborative US government approach to disaster relief is beneficial to the Department along many fronts. Of particular relevance is the need to raise our response metrics to 21st century business standards of effectiveness for both sbort notice catastrophes, e.g., hurricanes, and no-notice catastrophes, e.g., earthquakes or terrorist attacks. We are incorporating these concepts in our analysis of the Department's response to Hurricane Katrina and other recent disasters.
- Analysis
  - The paper advocates a broad vision for the transformation of the culture, structures, and strategies of government to an entrepreneurial public management approach that relies on a robust metrics-based measurement system. This includes a bi-cameral Katrina Recovery Working Group focused on the overall federal approach to Katrina recovery operations.
  - The recommendations provide a direction for government transformation that is consistent with ongoing changes in our Department If Congress adopts the recommended working group and assessment center to manage recovery operations, military planning and execution will likely be instrumental to this overall effort.

Skelton Requests Clarification of President's Remarks

'WASHINGTON, DC - Today, Rep. Ike Skelton (D-MO), Ranking Member of the House Armed Services Committee, sent a letter to President Bush asking him to clarify remarks he made during a recent speech that appeared to callfor an increased role for the military in domestic emergency response.

The text of the letter follows:

Ø

September 21,2005

The Honorable George W. Bush The White House Washington, DC, 20500

Dear Mr. President:

When Hurricane Katrina hit the Gulf Coast a mere three weeks ago, the poor coordination of efforts among federal, state and local agencies during the, initial response raised concerns among many Americans. The federal government, to include the Congress, must examine all aspects of this response, including whether the laws governing the interactions of various agencies in a time of large-scale disaster should be revisited. Such a review will not only help improve our nation's ability to manage natural disasters but can potentially enhance future consequence management capabilities necessary to respond to a terrorist attack.

Currently, the Stafford Act provides the legal framework for you to declare an emergency or major disaster in the event of an occurrence where the resources of the state and local governments are overwhelmed. The act also employs appropriate safeguards to ensure that state and federal jurisdictions are respected throughout the process. Additionally, the Posse Comitatus Act significantly limits the instances in which American military forces can be used for domestic law enforcement purposes. However, you have the full authority to waive the limitations of this act and employ military farces to restore domestic order, pursuant to constraints laid out both in statute and in Department of Defense (DoD) directives from 1989 and 1994.

In your address to the nation speech on September 15, 2005, you said "It is now clear that a challenge on this scale requires greater federal authority and a broader role for the armed forces." This statement seems to imply one of two intentions. Either you intend to alter the means by which the Posse Comitatus Act is waived, possibly allowing the federalization of disaster response to occur more expeditiously, or you intend to press for a rewriting of this law or others relating to the use of federal forces in domestic contingencies.

My question to you is whether efforts are underway to put your words into action. Is there an intent to either rethink the process by which you waive the Posse Comitatus Act or to encourage a full rewrite of the act itself? If so, then how? If not, then why? What changes, if any, are being contemplated to federal planning documents to contemplate a broader role for military forces? What direction has been given to the Department of Defense subsequent to your address to assess their plans and doctrine for domestic preparedness and response? Has the Department been given specific guidance with respect to inclusion of these issues in the Quadrennial Defense Review?

Or nation has faced many disasters, from those at the hands of nature to those at the hands of man, and the American people deserve to know that whatever the cause, a swift, competent and effective response will be forthcoming.

Sincerely,

Ike Skelton Ranking Democrat

INFO MEMO

September 26, 2005, 2:00 p.m.

(}

FROM: Daniel J. Dell'Orto, Principal Deputy General Counsel 🏷

SUBJECT: Posse Comitatus Act

- The phrase "posse comitatus" is literally translated from Latin as the "power of the county" and in common law referred to all those over the age of 15 upon whom the sheriff could call to help him perform his duties.
- The Posse Comitatus Act (PCA), 18 U.S.C. 1385, provides: "Whoever, except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress, willfully uses any part of the Army or the Air Force as a posse comitatus or otherwise to execute the laws shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than two years, or hoth."
- The PCA was originally enacted in 1878 due to congressional concerns about the use of Federal troops in the former-Confederate states to preserve law and order and to protect citizens' exercise of their Constitutional rights.
- Except for the addition of the Air Force, the language of the current statute is almost identical to the original 1878 law. As a matter of policy • but not law • DoD Directive 5525.5 makes the provisions of the PCA applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps.
- Absent Constitutional or statutory exceptions to the PCA, the Act has been interpreted to forbid active duty Army and Air Force personnel from directly participating in law enforcement activities such as arrests, searches, and seizures. The PCA does not restrict law enforcement activities by National Guard Personnel in a Title 32 (Federally funded state control) or state active duty status.
- Statutory exceptions to the PCA include the Insurrection Statutes upon request from the Governor; statutes that pertain to emergency situations involving chemical, biological, and nuclear material; and Public Law 107-40, enacted after the September 11,2001, terrorist attacks, which has been construed to authorize the President to use the armed forces for certain domestic operations if necessary and appropriate.

- Other provisions of law permit limited DoD assistance, generally in the form of equipment and information, to law enforcement agencies but do not permit direct participation by armed forces personnel in such law enforcement activities as arrests, searches, and seizures. These provisions include Military Support for Civilian Law Enforcement Agencies and Additional Support for Counter-drug Activities.
- The President has inherent authority under the Constitution to use the armed forces domestically in his role as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive notwitbstanding any apparent PCA limitations.
- Unless a statutory exception to the PCA is invoked or the President acts using his inherent constitutional authority, DoD Army and Air Force personnel providing hurricane relief support cannot participate in civilian law enforcement activities in the areas in which they are providing relief.

Few if any of the countries that have struggled to build democracies in the past 50 years, or for that matter since our own early beginnings, have faced an enemy as ruthless as the enemy that is opposing the emergence of a new Iraq.

Until December of this past year, the enemies of a free Iraq were led by one of the few dictators in modern times who approached Adolph Hitler in evil. Since then, Saddam's place has been taken by Izzat Ibrahim al-Duri, #6 on the Black List and a pillar of that evil regime for many years.

These ruthless men and their long-standing supporters – members of organizations modeled after the Gestapo and the KGB – are joined by ruthless terrorists, notably Abu Musab al Zarqawi, an Al Qaida-affiliated terrorist who has been responsible for some of the worst atrocities in Iraq in the past year. They have access to tens of millions of dollars in bank accounts in Syria, Lebanon and elsewhere with which to hire people to plant bombs and fire rockets. This is perhaps the first "guerilla war" in history in which "murder for hire" was the principal tactic.

The killers who kept Saddam in power and who continue to fight against the emergence of a new Iraq number in the thousands, but they are only a tiny fraction of the population of Iraq. And while they are extremely ruthless and have a fearsome power to intimidate, they offer nothing positive to the Iraqi people. That is why we have every reason to believe that ultimately the Iraqi people will triumph.

SUBJECT: Some thoughts on Iraq and how to think about it

Military commanders and other visitors to Iraq have confidence and conviction about the progress being made and what they see as the solid prospects for success. But, television and press reports in the United States and in much of the world generally focus on the problems and the difficulties, creating pessimism and even despair. And it is the media that is shaping public opinion here and across the globe.

It is fair to ask: Which of the two widely differing perspectives is correct, or more correct, and, therefore, which view ought to be shaping U.S. policy and world thinking on this important matter?

One reason for the disparity in perspectives may be the standard that one measures progress against. The dedicated volunteer soldiers engaged in the struggle against extremists are on the front lines. They see first-hand the extremists trying to hijack a religion from the majority of moderate Muslims. They see the terrorist insurgency that the Iraqi people face. They see, first-hand, ground truth. Further, they seem to understand that war has never been tidy, orderly or predictable.

Our troops recognize that conflicts have always been difficult, that people get killed and wounded. They see the Iraqis who courageously step forward and become targets of assassins. They know that the purpose of terrorism is to terrorize, to frighten and to alter behavior – and it works. There have always been those who, when terrorized, change course and seek to appease the terrorists. It has been so throughout history. So, those brave souls on the front line of this struggle see the conflict for what it is, and their expectations tend to be realistic. Their perspectives are rooted in an understanding of history and their own personal experiences.

Conversely, those removed from the battle, who receive their information from the media, tend to see it differently. Their perspectives are shaped by those who seem to compare the many difficulties and challenges, not against history or personal experience, but against a false standard of countries that have already succeeded in their struggles for freedom, countries that today enjoy relative tranquility. The media report events in Iraq that are not tranquil and, in many cases, are ugly. So, our publics risk falling prey to the argument that all is lost, that the terrorists are sure to win, and that what is being done is imperfect, or wrong, or misguided, or even malevolent.

The more correct perspective, I believe, is to look to history, to consider the struggles that have taken place over the decades and the experiences of countries that have made that difficult and dangerous journey from dictatorship to civil societies. Only by considering history can one fully appreciate that the path to freedom has always been difficult, dangerous, and marked by ugliness. So, to measure the Coalition's progress against countries that have successfully achieved their freedom misses the point.

What is taking place in Iraq is not unusual. The Iraqi people are on a tough road, a road filled with lethal dangers. But, as tough as it is, it is the right road. It is a road that has been successfully, if perilously, traveled by a number of countries over the decades. So, despite understandable concerns, it can be done. It has been done. Our own country went through tough periods, surviving demonstrations, riots, battles, deaths – but we made it. We succeeded because the American people were steadfast and courageous and did not listen to counsels of despair.

Many contended that Japan, Germany and Italy could not successfully move from fascism to civil societies. But, although it was not easy, they made it. In each case, it was hard. It took time. But they succeeded, to the benefit of the civilized world.

For a people to achieve great things requires that they be purposeful and steadfast. They must have a concentration span of something greater than a 30-second sound bite. They need to appreciate why Thomas Jefferson said of the path to democracy, "One ought not to expect to be transported on a featherbed."

What is taking place in Iraq is hard, to be sure. It is far from perfect and certainly not predictable. But it should not be expected to be perfect or predictable. But is it failing? No. Is there a good chance it will succeed? You bet. One thing is certain. U.S. and Coalition forces cannot be defeated on the battlefield in Iraq. Coalition nations will suffer casualties, as they are, but they cannot be defeated. The only way this noble cause can be lost is if people become falsely persuaded that the struggle cannot be won or that winning it is not worth the cost.

Those who seek the truth should challenge any who would measure progress in Iraq against unrealistic expectations. Ask: When in history it has ever been easy or predictable? When has a country gone from a repressive dictatorship to a peaceful, stable, constitutional, civil society without difficulties or loss of life – "on a featherbed"? Why should Iraq be measured against an unrealistic standard?

What is taking place is tough. It is uncertain. It is dangerous. It is ugly. It is requiring the sacrifice of fine young men and women – each a volunteer – and may God bless them all. But the very least they deserve is a totally honest assessment by their countrymen of what it is they are doing. The least they deserve is an accurate, truthful recognition of the progress that has been and is being achieved in Iraq, as well as in Afghanistan – the hospitals built, the clinics opened, the schools staffed and provided new textbooks and the economic progress. And the least the lraqi people deserve is an appreciation of the courage they have demonstrated – by their security forces and by the hundreds of Iraqis who have stepped up to become governors, city council members and police chiefs, at risk to their lives.

The test of wills we face – and it is a test of wills, let there be no doubt – calls for balance and historical perspective. The American people deserve that. They deserve it from the media that benefits from the constitutional protections, and, with those protections, has a responsibility to be fair, honest, and accountable.

The Iraqi people want their freedom, their security and the opportunities that will flow from them. More than 80 percent of the Iraqi people say they want Iraq to be whole. They are opposed to a breakup of the country. We know, despite terrorist attacks, assassinations, and disruptions to services, and despite the fact that terrorists and extremists kill innocent Iraqi citizens by the dozens each week – and have killed some 400 Iraqi security forces – that 70 percent of Iraqis say that getting rid of Saddam Hussein was worth the hardships they face today. Over 90 percent of Iraqi Kurds and 80 percent of Shia agree. Even among the minority Arab Sunnis, many of whom governed the country under Saddam Hussein, the figure is only slightly below 50 percent. So the Iraqi people understand that their lives are better today, despite the drumbeat to the contrary.

It is instructive to ask: What might be the alternatives to the course we are on for the 25 million recently liberated Iraqis, for that troubled region, and for the United States? What alternatives do those who criticize and contend that all that is lost suggest? Some say leave. What if the coalition were to leave? The possibilities are not attractive. They include:

- A failed state, anarchy, with terrorists taking over and creating a safe haven to attack the United States and other civil societies.

- A civil war and ethnic cleansing, filling up still more of Saddam's mass grave sites.
- Takeover by a neighboring country and radical clerics.
- A split up of Iraq into several parts, or
- A new Saddam Hussein could take control and re-impose a vicious dictatorship.

Which of those options would any argue would be better than the goal of Iraq as a single country, at peace with its neighbors, not trafficking with terrorists and respectful of women and all ethnic, religious and minority groups within their borders?

We are on the right course. The difficulties we face are understandable, given the history of countries that have navigated through these difficult seas. There is no better alternative for the Iraqi people, for the region, for the United States or for the world.

I repeat: there is no way this struggle can be lost on the ground in Iraq. It can only be lost if people come to the conclusion that it cannot be done. This struggle is being waged during an era of 24-hour news, seven days a week – for the first time in history. And it is being waged during a Presidential election year, when there seems to be a suspension of civil discourse. So, we are in for a rough period of months. But, when we are successful, it will be a fresh 21st century demonstration of the good center of gravity of the American people, and their common sense ability to separate fact from fiction and perseverance from paralysis.

SUBJECT SNOWFLAKE: JAG at Walter Reed

Beverly Young, the wife of Chairman Bill Young, wrote to President Bush in reaction to a Military Times article. Both her letter and the Times article are attached. The article notes that gifts to wounded troops must receive legal review.

According to the Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Executive Branch, 5 CFR 2635 subpart B, since gifts to wounded troops are offered because of their official position (as service members), they may not be accepted unless an exception to the prohibition applies.

For almost all gifts to wounded troops, the Walter Reed SJA has identified exceptions a worked with donors to permit troops to accept the offered gifts.

We have proposed legislation to expand your authority and the authority of the Secretaries of the Military Departments to accept gifts for the benefit of DoD personnel and their families. This Administration-approved proposal was inserted in conference for the FY 06 DoD Appropriations Bill on October 27th. It is also attached.

This is a chronic point of friction, and the Department should not need to work so hard to find exceptions. Accordingly, I have directed our Standards of Conduct office to work with the Office of Government Ethics to develop a specific regulatory exception.

Mr. President

My name is Beverly Young, wife of Chairman Bill Young of Florida. In my 20 years in Washington I honestly believed there was nothing more that could shock me, but I was wrong. Not only am I shocked, but I am nauseated and appalled about the article that Was written by a Ties Staff writer regarding gifts for wounded troops.

I couldn't believe that Walter Reed Army Medical Center has warned charitable groups that gifts to our wounded heroes could violate federal law. To suggest that troops could face discipline from a warning to a court-martial, at their commanders' discretion is disgusting. They have suggested that any requests or constitions go through the Walter Reed Family Assistance Center first, then be subject to review by the Medical Center Judge Advocate.

Sir, as you know since the tragedy of September 11,2001, I have been visiting hundreds of wounded soldiers and marines at Walter Reed Army Hospital and Bethesda Neval. Hospital. I felt the need to give back just a small amount to those great warriors who allow me and my children to sleep in peace at night. I was in one of the military hospitals two years ago Christmas Eve when a critically wounded marine was flown in with his young family at his side. His six year old daughter told me Santa wasn't coming to her house this year because her Daddy bad been shot. Where was the Family Assistance Center then? I am not plecing blame, but this war has taken a toll on these brave soldiers, sailors, matines, aimen and coastguardsman who have so valiantly been fighting the ficht. The last thing the wounded needs is to worry about being disciplined because someone wants to belp him in his hour of need. The despair in this marines face when his daughter made that statement, was more than anyone in the room could boar. In my families opinion, Santa had no right to let this marine or his family down Santa arrived before Christmas Day. Should the marine be disciplined for that? Should my family be disciplined? Should we have called Walter Reed Army Medical Center Christmas Eve and asked to speak to the Family Assistance center? What would the chances have been that there would have been someone there to answer the phone? Where we paying this marine off, as was suggested in this article, for putting his life on the line for our freedom? Maybe. But definitely not the fault of the marine. The love and compassion my family felt for this marine should be shared by this entire country. This was a proud marine family, they asked for nothing, they stood strong, and would have received nothing Christmas eve if it wasn't for the so called "illegal contributions".

I happened upon a young navy family, a wife with two young boys, sleeping on a hardwood floor, eating peanut butter and bread for almost two weeks. The injured was a Navy Corpsman who had given 12 years of his life to the Marine Corp as a medic. This here was in a tragic parachute accident that not only electrocuted him but cost him his sight in both eyes. He and his family had been transferred from their home in North Carolina to Maryland for long term rehabilitation. They were a two income family and in O a split second, he was sole provider. His wife was at his bedside 24/7. His military orders bad been "messed up" and their furniture, as well as his pay, were delayed. Because he was critically injured and blinded, he also lost his jump and dive pay. This family was proud, they went through the right channels, but the channels failed them, albeit unintentionally. Who came to their aid while the paper work was being corrected the private sector. If this family would not have accepted help from the outside, who knows what would have happened to the health and well being of those precious, innocent children. There are so many more cases I could share with you to say the least. These great Americans do not askfor contributions, they do not complain. The organizations that have been active since this war are doing so out of loyalty and love for our troops and the obvious need to help when help is not available. It is a shame, an article like this was even printed. I would like to be there when, at the commanders discretion, an American Hero, lying in the Intensive Care Unit on a respirator, is either warned or court martialed because someone cared or some corporation displayed compassion. How can a soldier in a comaprocess a request for assistance for his family, and why should he how to.

I am sure there is a huge public outcry over this ridiculous article. If congress needs to change the law regarding our herces, then they will. The majority of congress knows the sacrifices these kids make and are aware of the needs that are not met, for numerous reasons, by the government. Thank God them are charities and private citizens who are aware of the sacrifices of the people that put the uniform of the greatest country in the world on everyday. Thank God there are Americans who are willing and able to keep on giving, if need be. Shame on ANYONE who thinks the wounded soldier shouldn't receive all the love, help and support be or she could get from any American. I know, sir, that these are your sentiments also, I just couldn't go about my daily life and pretend that this insult to those great American herces didn't happen. Those who stand guard, protecting the rights of the innocent all over the world are the true herces. Every American should be grateful and proud. I for one an proud to call these herces my protectors, my friend. I and my family and friends will continue to try to meet the needs of these warriors and do not feel the need to ask permission to do so.

Section-by-Section Analysis

Current ambiguities in the law have prevented the Secretaries concerned from accepting certain offers of gifts, either for direct use by the Departments or for the benefit of their members and their families, 10U.S.C. 2601 authorizes the Secretaries to accept gifts of real or personal property. Subsection (a) would amend that statute to clarify that the Secretaries may accept the use of facilities as gifts. It would also clarify that the authority includes acceptance of services that benefit employees, service members, and/or their families, or are related or incidental to gifts of real or personal property. It would also clarify that the Secretary of Defense may accept the types of gifts discussed above for the purpose of supporting and benefiting activities that support the morale, welfare, or recreation of employees, service members and/or their families. It establishes an account identical to those established for the Secretaries concerned. It also provides authority to establish a defense agency or field activity within the Department to implement and administer the section. It further requires written guidelines incorporating standards of conduct that must be met before the gifts may be accepted.

10 U.S.C. 2608 authorizes the Secretary of Defense to accept gifts of real or personal property and gifts of services from foreign governments or international organizations. Subsection (b) would amend the statute to clarify that the Secretary of Defense may accept the use of facilities and authorize him to accept non-personal services from any person when there is no conflict of interest or violation of law or regulation,

This section would eliminate gaps in existing law. For example, this section would expressly permit the acceptance of such services as the provision of technical expertise or initial training and familiarization of donated equipments or materials. This section is distinct from the acceptance of "personal services" pursuant to section 1588 of title 10, United States Code.

Certain other agencies and organizations, such as the Asia Pacific Center for Strategic Studies (10 U.S.C.2611) and the Office of Government Ethics (5 U.S.C App. 403), already have the authority to accept gifts of services.

Gifts to wounded troops must be approved

By Karen Jowers. Military Times

WASHINGTON — Walter Reed Army Medical Center is warning charitable groups that gifts to wounded troops and their families may violate federal law if not first approved by Army legal officers.

A Washington Army National Guard sergeant tells students about how thankful troops in Irag. wore to get eare packages.

By Larry Steagall, AP

Officials at Walter Reed, the Army's largest medical facility, told representatives of 20 charities Sept. 27 that all charitable donations worth more than $20 must undergo military legal review.

The rules, designed mainly to prevent bribes to government employees, are not new but are news to some charities.

"I'll come out of Wal-Mart with $600 worth of videos and put two or three in a box to send, and guess what? We're over $20." said Mary Kay Salomone, founder of Operation Support Our Troops. "Maybe we need to have a blind eye so these people risking their lives can get a DVD that costs more than $20."

The rules cover all federal employees, including military members, and extend to family members.

Regulations also state that troops cannot solicit or coerce gifts. Yet troops deployed to Iraq and eisewhere have asked for, and received, specific items such as air conditioners, boots, DVD players and a variety of other items valued at more than $20.

Troops face discipline ranging from a warning to a court-martial, at their commanders' discretion, if they violate the regulations, Pentagon spokes woman Cynthia Smith said in a written response to questions.

"Someone claiming to be soliciting iPcds for his unit and then selling them on eBay would probably be dealt with more severely than someone who gets a free wheelchair paid for by a prohibited source," she wrote.

Charities ate being reminded of the rules as the holiday gift-giving season quickly approaches.

Walter Reed is not saying that gifts worth more than $20 cannot be accepted, Smith said. Regulations simply require that certain gifts are covered by a written ethics opinion, she said.

Walter Reed "has streamlined forms and procedures to expedite gift-acceptance ethics opinions." she said, with an "immediate turnaround" of the answers.

Jim Weiskopf, a spokesman for the Fisher House Foundation, which provides housing for military families who need to stay near the bedside of their recuperating relatives, said the foundation has been careful to follow the rules.

http://usatoday.printthis.clickability.com/pt/cpt?achon-spt/thie90SATODAY.com+-+Gi... 11/1/2005

USATODAY.com - Gifts to wounded troops must be approved

For the foundation's Operation Hero Miles program, in which airline tickets are donated by citizens or airlines, for example, a service member or family member seeking free tickets must get approval from military lawyers, using a preprinted form, and must include it with their request.

But Weiskopf said the rules don't seem logical when applied to low-ranking troops and their families.

"These are privates and sergeants," he said. "They are not taking bribes. Congress needs to do something to change the law."

The risk of punishment is prompting other groups to review their practices.

Marie Wood, executive director of the Yellow Ribbon Fund, said she has changed how her group provides rental cars to families in Washington to be near wounded troops.

"We will be careful, "Wood said. When military families call, *I tell them they have to go through the Walter Reed Family Assistance Center. We're going through the proper channels."

SUBJECT: Travel to Arizona and NORTHCOM

I am currently scheduled to travel on 15-17 November to Arizona to speak at two conferences and then on to NORTHCOM for an in-brief and visit.

My concern is that this trip will conflict with some currently scheduled, and possibly to-be scheduled, QDR and budget reviews.

The visit to Arizona is to meet with industry leaders (1. AIA Board of Governors and Membership; 2. Aerospace and Defense Top 20 Programs) to lay out my vision of the acquisition process and how the QDR and the budget will impact the Department's future plans.

The trip to NORTHCOM was scheduled at as part of my personal efforts to visit COCOMS on a fairly regular basis. I also intended to brief senior leadership on the QDR and ensure our customers were getting the tools they need.

I believe the trip to meet with industry leadership in Arizona is extremely important with the new NORTCOM leg valuable to do but seek your guidance and preference on having me available for QDR and budget discussions.

I will keep my current schedule and not make any changes until I receive your guidance.

I am currently scheduled to travel to India December 2-9. I arranged this trip at your direction following your meetings this summer with the Minister of Defense from India.

While this is outside the window in your snowflake, there is a SLRG on the schedule for the week I will be out. My concern is that with the upcoming QDR and budget decisions there may be reason for me to be here and available.
