ARGENTINA

Argentina is the second largest country in South America in both area and population. Because of its size and its relatively advanced economic, scientific and cultural development, Argentina has important influence in regional affairs. Together with Chile, Argentina geographically dominates the strategic ocean routes between the South Atlantic and Pacific Oceans that transit the Drake Passage, Beagle Channel and the Strait of Magellan. Argentina has an active interest in Antarctica and will play a major role in any future developments there. Its Navy has some capabilities for exercising sea control in the South Atlantic and the Cape Horn passages, and could be helpful if military control would be necessary. Argentina is a member of the Inter-American Defense Board, which plans for joint hemispheric defense. In addition, it is a signatory of the Rio Pact of 1947. In 1962, Argentina contributed some military aircraft to the Cuban blockade; they also dispatched two destroyers that were enroute when the blockade was lifted. Argentina has provided observers as part of the OAS forces during the Honduras and El Salvador conflict in 1970, and to the UN Peacekeeping Force in the Middle East. In May 1970, when an earthquake struck Peru, U.S. relief efforts were augmented by Argentina's Air Force aircraft in evacuating victims and in logistics operations.

U.S. military presence in Argentina dates back to 1934, when U.S. advisors assisted Argentina in establishing a Naval War College. Subsequently, there were government-to-government service mission agreements consummated. In 1962, the United States established the Military Group structure to facilitate the administrative and legislative requirements of the security assistance program. The current authorized strength of the U.S. Military Group is 37; however, because of security reasons, the staffing has been reduced to 14. The Argentines desire military representation based on the mission agreements, and it serves U.S. security cooperation responsibilities. Of importance to the United States, the Military Group provides a rapport and a line of communication with the Argentine military who are very influential politically.

Terrorism and guerrilla insurgency has plagued the country since 1968 and became intensive in 1974-1975, and still continues. The Argentine Army and Air Force are actively engaged in counter guerrilla operations.

Argentina has not received grant materiel assistance since 1968. The Foreign Military Sales credits being proposed for Argentina in FY 1977 will support their program of armed forces modernization, particularly their counterinsurgency and sea control capabilities. Equipment proposed includes: helicopters and river patrol boats for mobility and patrolling, tactical radios for command and control, and destroyers for sea control. Also planned is the acquisition of artillery to replace antiquated systems and engineer equipment that can be used for civic action purposes. FMS cash orders of about $3 million will likely be placed during FY 1977. Most of the cash purchases will be for support equipment and spare parts. Argentina's defense expenditures as a per cent of gross national product (GNP) is about 1.6%.

The International Military Education and Training program requested is to provide technical training essential to the operation and maintenance of equipment obtained from the United States, to sustain the pro-U.S. orientation of the Argentine Armed Forces, and to contribute to their increased professionalism. The Argentine military school system is well-developed and they are self-sufficient in most technical areas except where the small annual requirement for certain technicians makes it uneconomical to establish a full training base.
